

GRAYBEARD, THE SORCERER.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, 98 WILLIAM STREET NEW YORK. Castell & Co., 3 front street, brookiyn.

OLD BLACK HAWK'S FOES.

Beadle's Dime Novels, No. 243,

TO ISSUE TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 21st, the publishers present something to amuse as well as to delight the lovers of border and Indian fiction, viz.;

THE BLACK PRINCESS;

OR,

The Border Refugees.

BY JOS. E. BADGER, Jr.,

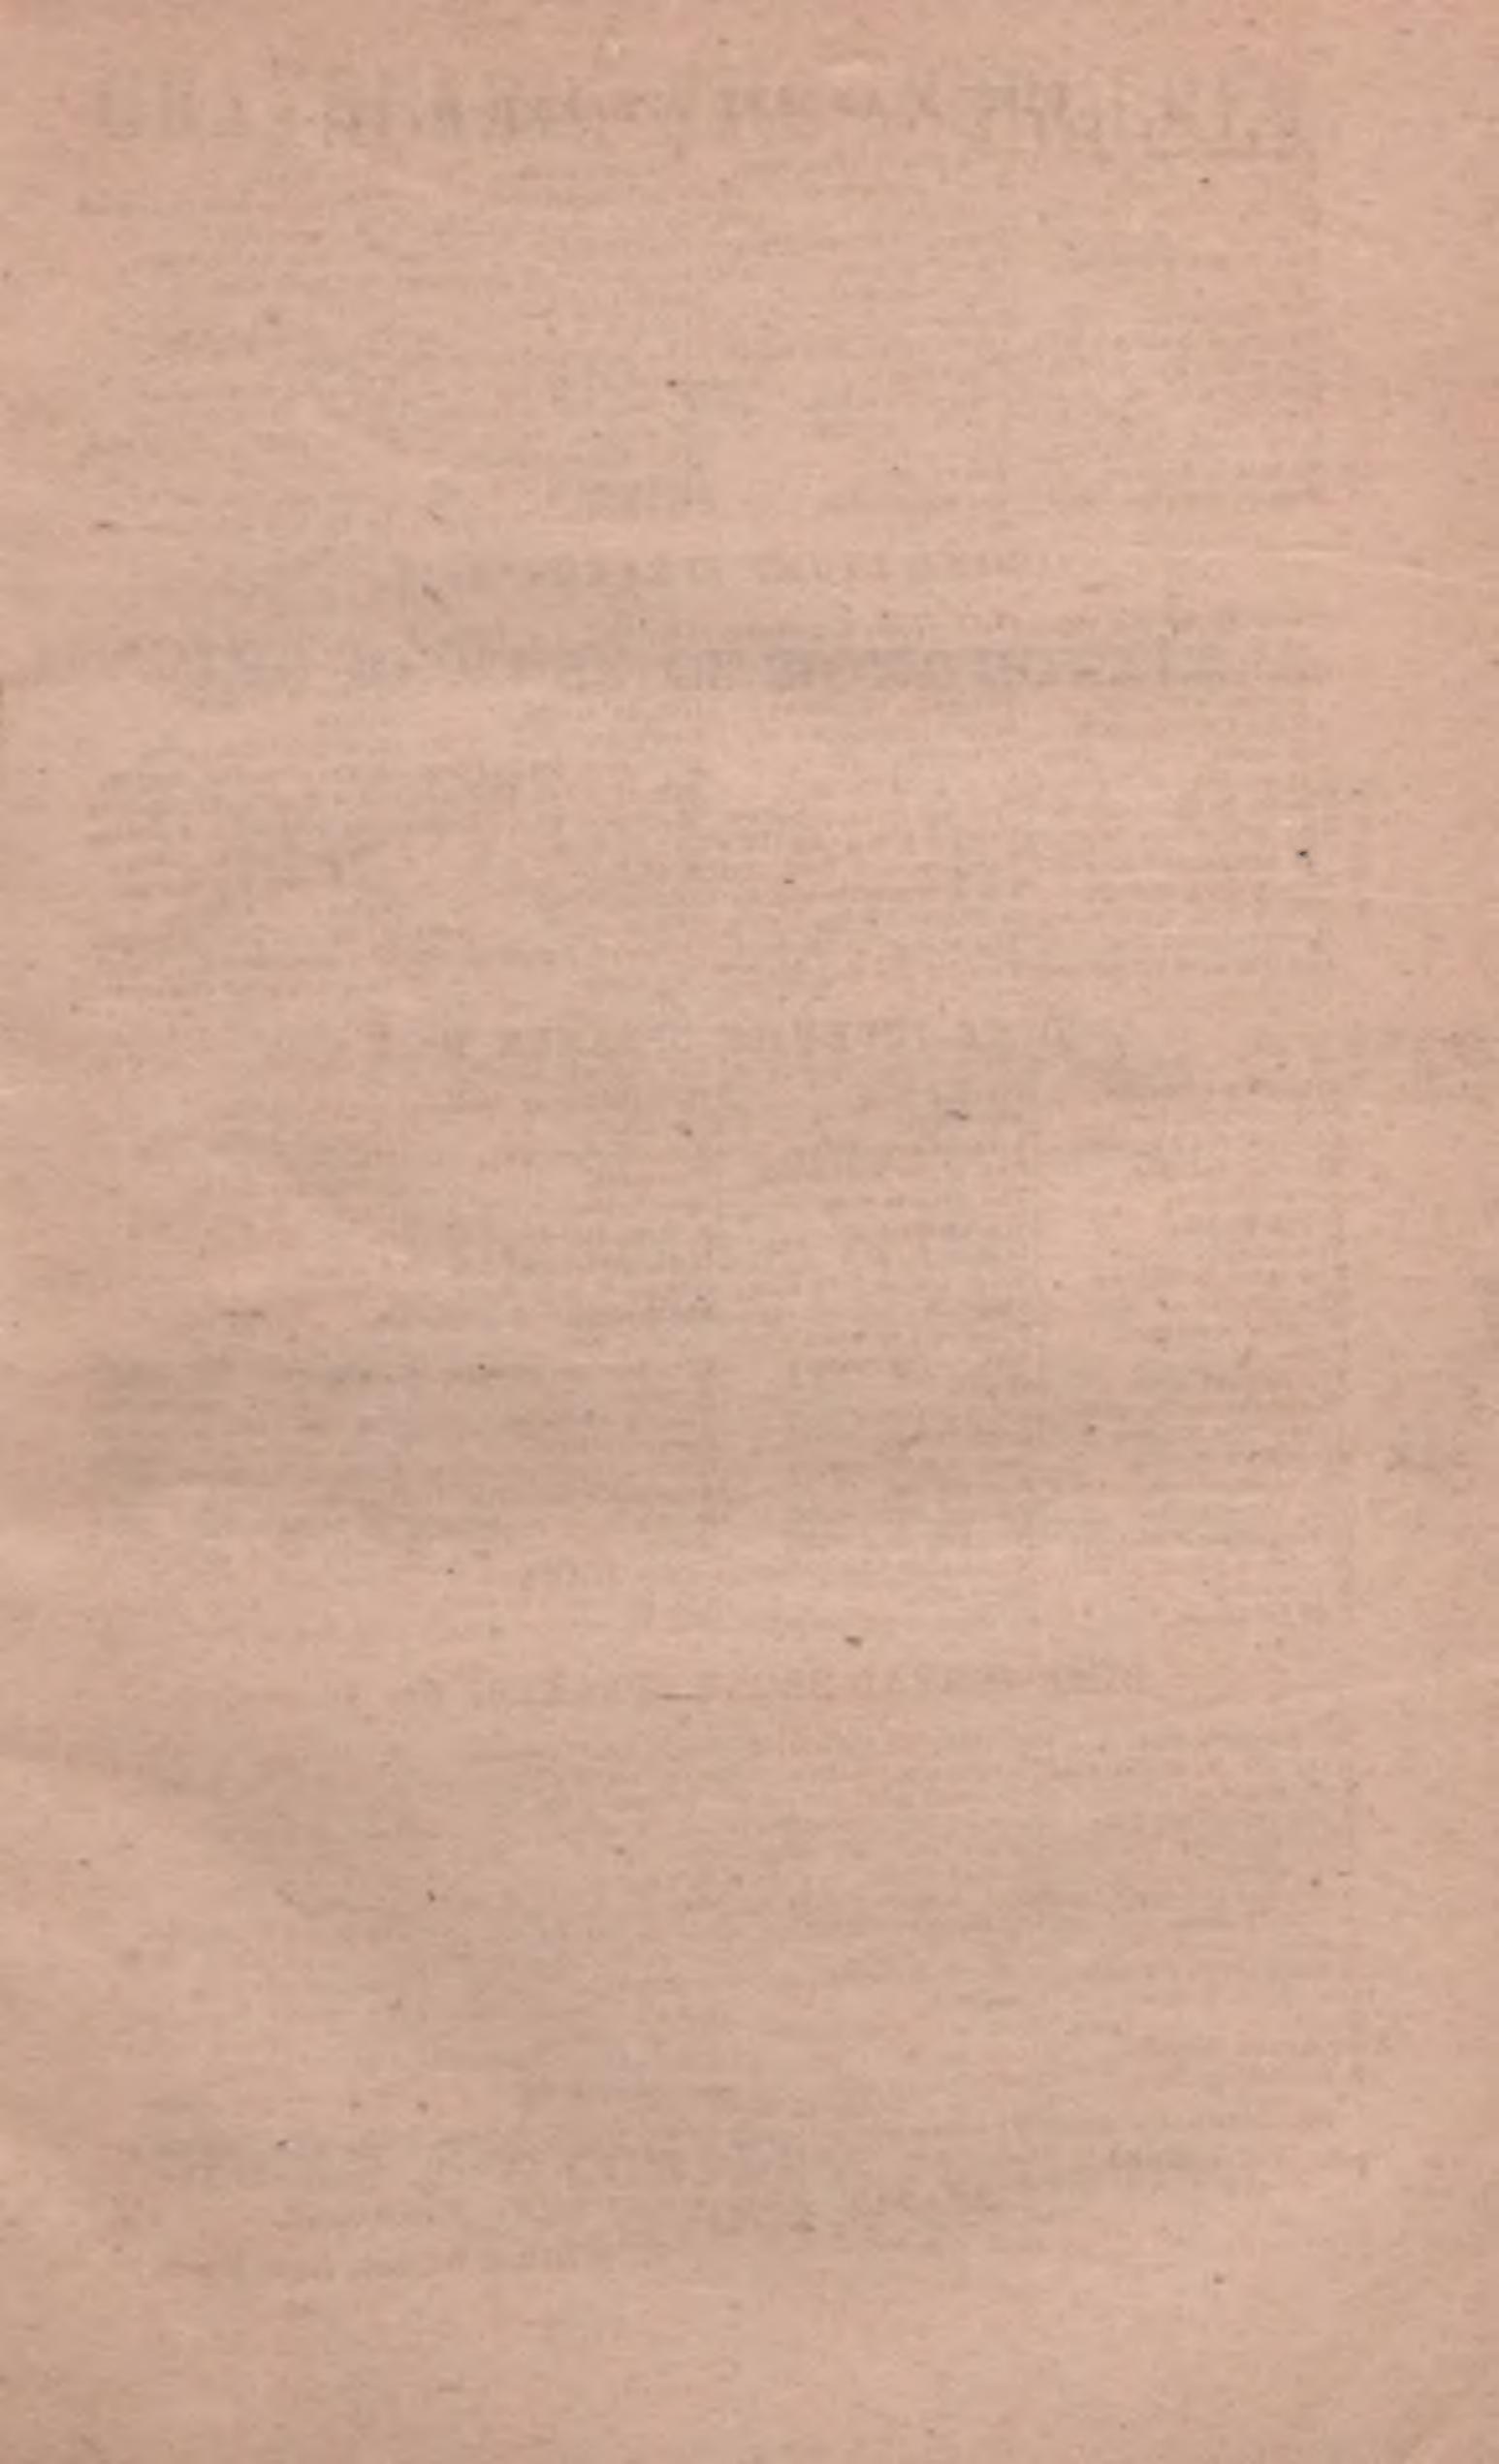

The greatest line of the woods was old Pete Shafer—whom the readers of this series will not soon forget.

But, young Pete was, if possible, not behind his "daddy"-a liar of liars, but all so quaint, so queer, that we forgive the weakness as we laugh.

Young Pete scouts and fights just as well as he lies; and he loves, even better, for in the beauty of the woods—the Black Princess—he finds his fate, and while he fights for dear life, and old Plack Hawk thirsts for his blood—he goes on loving and wooing all the same—and how it all ends this queer and captivating story tells.

For sale by all newsdealers; or sent, post-paid, to any address on receipt of price—TEN CENTS.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers,
98 William Street, New York.

THURSDAY BUR DALLEY LAR

BILESCOR ENOUGH TO THE HERET with the finding of the former of

- CONTROL SERVICE SERVICE AND A P. S.

THE REPORT OF THE PARTY SEE

GRAYBEARD, THE SORCERER;

OR,

THE RECLUSE OF MONT ROYALE.

BY C. DUNNING CLARK,

Designation of the particular and the particular an

PERSONAND ONA MARKE

AND THE PARTY OF THE PROPERTY AND THE PROPERTY AND

Author of the following Dime Novels:

124. SUMTER'S SCOUTS,

138. TIM, THE SCOUT,

144. PRAIRIE TRAPPERS,

160. SWAMP RIFLES,

177. PALE-FACE SQUAW,

182. JABEZ HAWK,

194. GRAYLOCK, GUIDE,

228. THE MUTE CHIEF.

NEW YORK:

BEADLE AND COMPANY, PUBLISHERS,

98 WILLIAM STREET.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1871, by

BEADLE AND COMPANY.

In the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

THE REPORT OF THE PERSON OF THE PARTY OF THE

CRALEGINE THE SHEET STATE

HARRINE ALL FILL FILLS

(No. 242)

NATURE WARRENDER WARREND TO THE PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF

- Description of the Land of the Control of the Con

Compared to the second section of the second sections of the section of the second section of the section of

THE PARTY OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY.

EDITED TO THE TENTE OF THE PARTY OF THE PART

The same of the sa

GRAYBEARD, THE SORCERER.

CHAPTER I.

THE RECLUSE OF MONT ROYALE

A solitary figure stood upon a hight, now Mont Royale, overlooking the city of Montreal, as it stood in the early colonial days. Montreal of the past was not the city of the present, a thriving mart of commerce, with its shipping at the wharves, its towering spires, and long lines of business edifices and dwellings, but a small yet growing village, standing upon the lower point of the island which is now one vast city. The dwellings were mostly of the humbler sort, with whitewashed walls gleaming in the sunshine, and with the quaint gables and peaked roofs copied from the French cottages of that early day. Mont Royale was covered with a thick growth of timber upon its sides, but the summit was bare, and it was upon this point that the man stood.

He was one past the middle age, and though plainly dressed, showed in his face and manner that he had not sprung from the poorer class. His figure was erect and stately, and his face, though seamed by lines which many cares and sorrows had imprinted there, was still a man of power among his fellows. His hair was dark, slightly touched with silver, and curling about his temples in thick masses. His dress was of sober brown, with knee-breeches, white stockings and the conical hat of the period. The belt about his waist was of black leather, with a silver buckle, supporting a long rapier of the most approved make, upon the hilt of which a white, patrician hand unconsciously lingered as he looked down upon the city at his feet with a strange, fixed, intent gaze.

"Lie there, Montreal," he muttered. "Bask in your supposed safety, and keep within your walls your infamous robbers and traitors. But, beware of me, for my day of vengeance will surely come. I wish Chastellar would appear."

He sat down upon a loose bowlder of gray stone, with his eyes still fixed upon the distant city, and as he looked, a mournful light showed itself in his firm, set face.

"Who would have said, when I was in the zenith of my power, fifteen short years ago, that I should be an outcast and a wanderer, homeless, hopeless, with a blot upon my name? I, who never dreamed of wrong—I, whose only thought was to build up in this wilderness a nation which should be the refuge for all mankind, oppressed by the strong hand of power! It drives me mad to think of it! Ha; who comes now?"

He sprung to his feet, and quick as thought buried himself in the depths of the undergrowth about the crest of the mountain. Directly after he heard the sound of voices, musical laughter, and the deep tones of a man's voice, and there appeared upon the platform which he had just left a lady and a French officer, who stopped to get breath after the ascent. They had come up the mountain from the southern side, and had nearly taken the lonely man unawares. But, his ears, trained to catch the slightest sound, had heard even the light step of the girl, and he now lay hidden in the bushes, resting upon one knee, gazing at them from the cover with a face which seemed to have been suddenly transfigured. His eyes were fixed upon the girl, with an expression of adoring admiration which could only proceed from perfect love. And indeed, she was well worthy of it.

Picture to yourself a patrician face, cut in perfect outlines, with a complexion of marvelous delicacy, ripe, red lips, a little full, eyes of heaven's own azure, and a profusion of shining brown hair blowing free in the breeze of the mountain; a perfect figure moving with a willowy grace peculiar to some women and only to a chosen few, and you have some idea of this girl as she appeared to the eager watcher. She was richly dressed, and was evidently of the higher order, and had the ease and grace of motion which only the best education and society can bestow. She held a staff in one hand, with which she had assisted her steps up the slope, and, in the other, swung by the strings a jaunty riding-hat, with a pure white feather wreathed about the crown.

Her companion was a man nearly forty years of age, also of her order, wearing the uniform of a lieutenant colonel of foot, one of the most showy uniforms in the world. As handsome as Apollo, with a dark face, flashing black eyes and hair of the same color. Upon the first glance he had a very pleasant face, but, looking at him closer, there was something in the eyes, and about the lips which was not so pleasant. He seemed to have a love of display in dress, for his sword-hilt was of chased gold, of great value, in which flashed a ruby of fabulous price. His hat was looped up with a large diamond, and he showed more gold lace and bullion than even the uniform of his regiment allowed. Tall and strong, with the limbs and shoulders of a Hercules, he looked an invincible antagonist to meet in a battle.

"You have not deceived me, Colonel Lefebre, when you said that this view was magnificent, and would repay the trouble of the ascent," said the lady, in a mellow voice. "It is surpassingly fine."

Those who have stood upon the slopes of Mont Royale, looking toward Montreal, can well indorse this encomium. The fertile plains are there yet, but the miles upon miles of waving pines, the changing scenery of verdure, are there no longer. The whole island upon which the city stood was in full view; the two branches of the river, joining again just below the city, and the frowning fortress with the sentries on the ramparts, are changed in our day. The lady stood, with rapt gaze upon the beautiful scene, while the officer evidently enjoyed her surprise and pleasure.

"I hoped that you would like it, Mademoiselle Lavalle," he said. "You know that I would do any thing to give you pleasure."

"Merci, mon colonel!" she said, with a mocking courtesy. "Do not compliment me, but your own good taste, which has led you to show me this grand scenery. I wonder if the day will come when we shall see a great city where Montreal now stands. Frenchmen build great hopes upon the future of this colony, but they may come to naught."

"Never! The future of Canada is assured, at least in my eyes. Year by year you will see our strength increase, until we are a vast nation including all the land which lies to the south between this and the Spanish colonics. But, I had something to say to you--another object than the scenery-when I brought you to this place."

"But I will listen to nothing else," cried Mademoiselle Lavalle. "How dare you change a subject until I give you leave?"

But you must hear me, mademoiselle. No, not that cold name, Coralie; I will call you by that name. You know that I love you, and that you have given me hope."

Her face began to cloud at this.

"Colonel Lefebre, you are a man of honor, high in power and in the good will of the Governor of this province, and you have been a friend to me. But, if you design to take advantage of my rashness in giving you this opportunity, you will find yourself mistaken in your estimate of my powers of resistance. I think it will be well for us to return."

"Not yet, I beg you," he said. "I do not wish to offend you, and my passion may have led me astray, but, I love you dearly, and would give my life for your sake."

"I have a mission to perform, and, until that mission is accomplished, I will not listen to words of love from any man. I am one without a name, and until the time comes when I have a father to give me his name, to give my hand to the man who loves me, I shall never marry."

The colonel looked at her in wild amazement, as at one who saw a vision. His hands clenched and unclenched themselves in a spasmodic way, and he bit his lips until the blood started.

"Destruction!" he muttered. "Will my own act recoil upon me? Can the grave give up its dead, and her father rise out of it to give his daughter to me? Mademoiselle," he continued, raising his voice, "you do yourself and me a great wrong. Have you any reason to know that your father lives, or who he is?"

"My heart tells me that he lives, and that I shall discover him, and regain a name which is mine by right."

"Monsieur Lavalle is an honest gentleman, and loves you like a daughter. He has given you his name, and when he dies you will receive his fortune. What more can you desire?"

"To know who and what I am! The man I can love will be a man of honor, and I can not consent to blot the name of such a man by giving him a hand which may be linked with dishonor. Let this suffice, and say no more about it, Mansieur Colonel. I esteem you highly, but, until the purpose of my life is accomplished, I can not consent to give you any hope. You have been kind to me, have honored me in your choice, and it is better for you to know that there is little hope."

"You persue a hopeless chimera, Coralie. You east aside the love of a man who adores you for a dream which may never be realized. You know nothing of your parentage, and the only man who could have spoken is now in his grave, the old soldier in whose care Lavalle found you. How then can you hope to find your parents?"

"It may be a task of years, but I shall succeed in the end."

He struck his hand angrily upon his sword-hilt, and his face darkened visibly, but, as she looked at him quickly, it cleared again, and he assumed a look of extreme humility. As they stood in this attitude, a shambling step was heard, the his-hes parted, and a strange figure came out upon the crest of the mountain—an old, bent, decrepit man, whose white hair hung low upon his breast, and who walked with difficulty, leaning upon a staff. He was so bent as to be almost a hunchback, and stood with both hands clasping the staff looking fixedly at the pair.

"The dove and the vulture in company," he cried, in a shrill, cracked voice. "Leave him, fair lady, lest a great evil come to you."

"Who is this?" said Coralie, recoiling in surprise. "Trom whence did he come?"

"A madman, whom menerall the Recluse of the Mountain," said the colonel. "Here, old dotard, how dare you interrupt me?".

"Silence!" shricked the old man, striking the earth with his staff. "In the name of the past, which is a book you do not care to read, I command you to be silent."

"What do you know of the past, old wretch?" replied the colonel. "Back to your den among the rocks before a worse thing happen to you!"

"Colonel Lefebre," said Coralie, quickly, "I do not understand you. Surely you can not mean to threaten an old man, whom you say is mad."

"He insults me, and only harsh measures will avail with him," replied Lefebre. "I begyour parlon, but I have hear I that he has used my name before."

"You ask me what I know of the past?" chelithe Rechael.

"Shall I open the book of fate and read the past to you, Colonel Lefebre? Shall I tell of the tragedy at Quebec, of the forged letters, of the infamy by which a noble man was sacrificed? Do you ask me to speak of all this?"

Lefebre turned ghastly pale and staggered like a dranken man, his eyes diluted, and his breath coming in quick gasps through his closed lips. Coralie looked at him in astonishment, and the old man laughed in demoniac glee.

"The time is not yet, Victor Lefebre," he said. "I have looked into the book of fate, and it says that you are to enjoy the wages of sin for a season, but not long. When the time comes, when the cap of happiness is dashed from your lips by a hand which has been dust for years, when the dead comes out of their graves to witness against you, think of the Recluse of Mont Royale, and remember his words!"

He turned and seemed about to leave them, but came habbling back, and addressed himself to Coralie.

"Men say that I am mad, hely," he said. "Perhaps I am, but there is method in my madness yet. That man knows it, for you see his small soul shrink and transle at my works. Beware of him! Think my voice the voice of the one whom you seek, and respect my warning. This mean's heart is black with many crimes, although he cloaks it under a subtle mask. When he seems to speak the truth, he lies the most feelly."

"You can not blame me now, Coralie," graped Left. "."
"Die, old villain, and croak your calumnies in the lowest pit."

His sword was cut as he spoke, and the next memorit was thrust straight at the heart of the Rechas, while Comile attered a shrick of terror. But, the old man stood because on his staff, with his face unmoved and storn, bedand at the world be as as in, while Lefchie stood as abled before him, holding in his hand the remains of his fine Toledo blane, shivered to the hilt!

4-

"Away!" cried the Recluse. "You have no power to harm me, villain, and I will be an avenging fate, to follow you until the end shall come. Go!"

"If the sword has failed me, this shall not," cried Lefebre, snatching a pistol from his belt. "Down on your knees and beg for mercy."

Quick as thought the old man lifted his staff and it fell upon the arm of the colonel just above the clbow—a scientific blow, delivered with the force and address hardly to be looked for in one so old, and the arm of Lefebre fell nerveless to his side, while the pistol dropped to the earth. Before he could draw another we upon Coralic glided between him and the object of his wrath, facing the colonel boldly.

"You are showing yourself in a new light to me, Colonel Left bre. I at least thought you a man of honor, but no such than will a sail one so old as this with deadly weapons. I order you to cease."

"Fear nothing for me, lady," said the Rechae. "It is not in this man's power to harm me."

"You shall see," hissed the colonel. "For the present you are safe, but a time will come when you shall know who has the power, you or I. Malemoiselle Lavalle, do you return under my escort?"

"Go with him," sail the Recluse. "Watchful eyes shall be upon him at every step he takes, and he shall not offer you an injury. You shall hear from me again, and soon."

He turned and hobbled quickly into the bushes, never turning his head to look back.

CHAPTER II.

THE SECRET SPY.

While Coralic Lavalle and the colonel were returning in silence toward the place where they had landed, the Rechne was making his way slowly among the rocks which were plentifully strewn about the summit, until he reached a sheltered spot in the woods, where a sort of hillock of a broken ledge cropped out of the surrounding surface. Here he pared, and struck three times upon a stone, and waited. A moment after a dark face appear d at one of the numerous fissures—a face so herce and relentless in its expression that it might well have appalled the stoutest heart. This being drew himself slowly out of the rift in the hill and revealed a Hercule n figure, click in untanned deep skin, his head uncovered, and a hage club in his right hand. The face was very dark, but not exactly the face of a negro; rather one of the nerthern tribes of Africa, perhaps a Moor.

"I have seen him again, Abah," said the Recluse. "The vill in and myself stood face to face and I did not kill him. I could not while he holds the secret I would know."

The Moor shook his head slowly from side to side; a deep scar which crossed his face from the left corner of his mouth to the right eye grew livid along its entire length; he struck the rock fiercely with his club.

"Remember that you must control yourself, Abala, if by chance you should meet him alone. Remember, that if he dies without confession all my years of labor will have been in vain."

Abah placed his finger upon the livid scar and traced it throughout its entire length, looking at the Recluse in pairingly.

"I see it, Abah, and I know who gave you that mark, and that you will not forget nor forgive. But, for my sake, do not take vengeance for your wrongs until I have wrang the secret from him. Do you promise?"

Abah took the hand of the old man and hid it upon his breast, pressing it warmly.

"I understand you, good and true friend. You provise that your private revenges shall sleep until I have done my work. On my part I promise that he shall not die by my hand!"

A ferocious joy gleamed in the swarthy face as Abab. Well his eyes and hands toward heaven in a solemn and impressive gesture.

" Has Chastellar been here?" demanded the R class.

The Moor shook his head, and, even as he did so a signal-whistle sounded from the woods and the Rochese start to

"There he is now. Give the answer, Abah."

The Moor lifted his hand to his mouth and gave utterance to a strange cry, which rung wildly through the forest. The whistle was repeated near at hand, and evidently approaching.

"Go out and meet him, Abah," said the Recluse, "and bring him to me."

As he spoke he stepped into the fissure and was out of sight. The Moor, picking up his club, strode away through the forest in the direction of the approaching person, whoever it naight be. After a while he sat down upon a stone and waited, giving his signal from time to time. Soon after he was joined by a young men in a hunting-dress of green cloth, carrying, besides his sword and pistols, a short but beautifully finished ritle of polished steel, which was slung upon his back. He had a bold, manly face, strong and true, full of earnest purpose, and was a compact mass of thews and sinews.

"Ha, old Abah," he cried. "There you are! What new mischi f have you and your master cooked up for me to perform ?"

The Moor smiled, a smile which made his dark face more demoniac than ever, and, taking the hand of the speaker he laid it on his head.

"That means that you are glad to see me, old man? Very well; in default of a better way of expressing yourself, perhaps it will do. Where is your master?"

The Moor pointed in the direction from which he had

.comer

"I don't know how it will end with me," said the young man, signing to the Moor to lead the way, "but, my life has leen full of desperate chances and I will not hesitate now, Chastellar, the outliew, is not Louis Chastellar, captain of Musketeers, and he must do any work which falls to his share."

The Moor led the way in silence, and reached the tumbled mes of rocks from which he had first appeared. He entered the Essure and the young man followed him without question, aithough he had never penetrated to this dark den before. The course they took was through a low path among the recks, which soon became shrouded in darkness, and Abah tok his hand to guide him Crouching low, to guard their I. .. Is from the juzzed rocks which hung dangerously near them, they kept on by a crooked way until the faint glinimer of a light was seen in front, and they came into a small irregular cave lighted by a lamp which hung from a wooden bar fixed into the rocks. A couple of rude beds occupied two of the corners, and in the center of the cave was a brazier filled with glowing wood, over which a small bettle was boiling. The Recluse was scatted upon a rock, waiting for them.

"You have come then, Chastellar," he said in a sad tone.
"I began to fear that some evil had befallen you, for I dil not think Louis Chastellar the man to desert a friend as unfortunate as himself."

"You judged me rightly, by heaven, De Lambert," sail Chastellar. "Pah! How can you stay in such a hole as this, when you have the free woods outside. By our lady, they and me a service, when they drove me out of Montreal, for a trime of which I was innocent. I never was so happy as I am now, knowing that these men fear me, and that the sound of my name will bring the garrison of Montreal to arms as quickly as the war-cry of the Iroquois. They fear me now; I warned them."

"You know to whom you are indebted for the indignity put upon you, do you not, Louis Chastellar?"

"Know him! Let me once get him at my sword's length and he shall know what it is to make an enemy of me! Look you, De Lambert; I trusted that man in every thing. I would have trusted him with my life—with my soul. He seemed to me an open, honorable man, to whom a bad action would have been a thing impossible. That was my conception of Victor Lefebre."

"I have seen the time when I would have said the same, but, like you, my eyes have been opened to his baseness only by my ruin. Do you know that I saw him to day—yes, stood face to face with him for full ten minutes?"

"And you did not strike him dead at your feet?"

"I dared not. He holds the secret I must know before he dies."

"Yes, yes; he can not die yet. Oh, my goed, kind, consider de friend, when that is known, how small your chances of life! What do you want me to do?"

- " I want you to go to Montreal upon an errand."
- "Umph ; it is risky."

"You shall have a dispuise which no one can penetrate. I provide the temper of the scoundrel's blane to-day, for he struck at my breast and the steel shivered in his hand."

"Ha; then Abah has not deceived you about the protection? I think I will try his skill myself, for a sword point new get within my guard one of these days in spite of my skill in fea-cing. I—". -

Just then a wild cry was heard, and Abah da hed into the cavern holding by the waist a diminutive, weazen-faced Prenchman, whose small countenance expressed the utmest terror. They knew him in a moment as a sly, treacherous secundrel, who did the spying of Lefebre. His name was Antoine Castor.

"Ha," cried Louis, starting to his feet. "You black-hearted dog, do you know that you have scaled your own fate by spying upon me? Away with him, Abah! You know what to do."

"On, non Dien, mon Dien!" screamed the spy. "You do not, can not mean to give me up to this black devil? Have mercy upon an innocent man!!

"Innocent! By heaven if you dare profane the name of innocence again you are no better than a dead man."

The wretch was on his knees, groveling like a snake, and crawling to clasp the knees of the young outlaw, who regarded him sternly.

"Oh, Monsieur Louis—ah, Monsieur the Recluse, have mercy upon an unfortunate man and save me from this black demon! I was forced to do it, Monsieur Louis—I was, indeed."

"You know me then," said Louis, knitting his brows.
"Sir, do you think we dare take the great risk of allowing this man to live?"

"I am afraid not," replied the Recluse. "Since he has fored himself unbi-iden upon our privacy, he must bear the penalty of his presumption. Abah will attend to him."

"Wait! In the name of the holy Virgin, wait. I can make myself useful to you if you will spare my life. I know my nuster's secrets and I will know more. Spare my and I will only live as a spy upon him, do your bidding in all things, work for your interests rather than my own. Send that black man away. Diables! How he gries at me."

"Stand aside for a moment, Abah," said the Recluse, solomnly. "I think we may bind this man to our interests so closely that he dare not betray us. Now, Antoine, let me recall a certain thing to your memory. Three years ago, you were in Quebec and a man was killed upon Point Levi, on the night of June 12th 1754. Do you happen to know who killed him?"

"I? I know nothing of this which you speak, mon-kur."

"How very lucky for you. Fortunately I can throw some light upon this little matter and I will do so. This man had been sent from Chambly to Montreal and from thence to Quebec, with a paper in his possession necessary to save Captain Louis Chastellar from disgrace. It was not the cas of your master to allow Louis to escape, and he sent a man who killed the messenger, and the paper disappeared. Do you wish me to tell the name of the man who killed the messenger?"

"No, no; spare me l"

"Do you know where that paper is now?" cried Chastellar eagerly.

"I think I could find it," stammered the poor wretch. "I would try hard."

"You may have the opportunity. Transfer your service from Colonel Lefebre to me, and you shall never have reason to repent it. Labor for my interests as zealously as you have always done in those of my enemy and I shall have no recon to complain of you. But he sitate, dare to show by a worl or act that you think of rebellion, and that moment you are doomed, past all redemption. Do you promise to join me?"

"I promise. What am I to do?"

"You are to go back to Montreal and remain in the ervl of the colonel. You can act for us far better there than if you remain with us outside. Your first act will be to proper yourself of the paper which will prove my innocence, and bring it to me."

"I will do it."

[&]quot;And remember one thing. Watchful eyes are on you, move where you will. The least token of yielding on your part will be the signal for your destruction. If at any time you see the sign of two cressed dargers placed before you, be sure that we are displeased with you and that danger is very near."

" I shall be careful."

- "You will do well. Once before death has been very near you, when you knew it not. It will follow you close if you do not beware."
 - " I will be very careful."
- "In the day when you are slack, look for Abah to come to you!"
- "I shall not give him occasion," replied the other, casting a territial glance at the giantic figure of Abah, as he leaned against the wall. "Give me my instructions and let me go, and if I do not your will in all things, I shall deserve a visit from you."
- "Agreed. You may go as soon as you like. Of course Lefebre sent you here.".
- "Yes; he told me to follow the Recluse and find where he lurked, and-"
 - " Marder me if you got the chance."
 - "Ah, no, surely."
- "Antoine," said the Reeluse, quietly, "you have a certain respect for me, but you are far from fathoming me yet. Come here."

Antoine approached him in a cringing manner, abject hurallity up a his face. The Recluse took up two small pieces of wood, about the size of chisel handles, which seemed to be connected with a strangely shaped box at his feet. The Recipies this foot upon a small wheel and began to turn it slowly, and then more rapidly, by means of a contrivance like a too lathe. Spasmodle contractions began to show them sives in the face of Antoine, his arms because to twitch, and short yells of surprise and agony broke from his lips. The perspiration started from every pore, and he danced wildly about, but ally unable to drop the sticks.

"On, murder, mil's distant. Shere Ust! Help; release me, if you have any manhood in your beson. Release me, or ly the saints I perish where I stand. On I had had had here het. Oh!"

There was a slight movement of the foot of the old man, and Antoine dropped the handles, looking askance at the dangerous instrument, of which he had no conception. The Rechuse sat with that unchanging smile upon his face.

"Do not go yet. You must see another exhibition of my power. Abah, come here."

The Moor came forward, and brought out a little stool elevated upon three glass legs, and took one of the handles in his hand, and the wheel again began to turn, while Anteine looked on curiously, expecting to see the same contortions upon the part of the Moor as those which had so surprised him. But Alah made no sign except this: his long elf locks began to rise and separate, and a strange crackling sound proceeded from it. Abah dropped the handle and turned toward Antoine. "Strike him," whispered Louis, who was watching the proceedings with a keen relish. Abah raised his land at a struck the spy a slight blow upon the nose. Instantly the sparks flew from the proboscis of the terrified Frenchman, and he rolled upon the earth, uttering cries of the will lest terror.

"That will do," said the Recluse, quietly. "He will not trouble us again soon by coming to this place. Atah, show him out."

"Don't let him touch me," screamed Antoine. "The devil is in this place, I believe from my soul."

He direct out of the cave, followed more slowly by Allah, while the Recluse and Louis sat looking at each other with amused faces.

"Yes, Louis," said the Recluse. "We have done a good work. This man dare not act against us, for his life is in danger. Fear not; we shall be sure to triumph in the cu.!."

CHAPTER III.

CORALIE'S CHILDHOOD.

Cononer Leverer, upon reaching the place where he had left Antoine, had sent that worthy as a spy upon the Recluse, and had then returned to Montreal, his heart full of evil passions. Coralic walked by his side in sizence, a sad expression upon her beautiful face. She had trusted in this man, had believed him a pattern of honor, and her idol had been at licenly and rudely shattered. The implied threats upon the part of the Recluse, the evident fear which the colonel had of the strange hermit, had made her doubt him; and his assault upon a gray-haired man had destroyed her faith in him. They reached the river, where the colonel signaled for a battern, and while they waited he turned to Coralic:

"You hate me, now," he said, in a mourtiful tone; "but if you only knew how much cause that old fiend has given me to hate him you might not blame me so much."

"Nothing em excuse your murderous assault upon a man so old, Colonel Lefebre. How he was preserved I do not know, but it must be that the good God watches over the unsuspecting and innocent and saves them from danger. You had nord r in your heart when you struck him."

"He angered me beyond endurance," he muttered, sav-

"As there is a limit to human patience, so also there is a point beyond which matter passion nor prejudice should be suffered to betray us. Enough of this; you will understand that we can not be friends after what has happened, and you are not to address me upon intimate terms as heretofore. In society we must be the same, but in our private walks and conversitions there must be a change."

"You cast me off then, upon the unsubstantiated statements and accurations of an imbacile old man?"

"You have proved that his charges are not without foundation, sir. Let us say no more, for the bateau is here." A large flat-bottomed boat, propelled by four stout boatmen, was shooting up the stream and had almost reached them.

"I must speak," he said, lowering his voice. "This is not the end of my suit to you, although you may think so. I am not a man easily bathled, and you shall find it so."

Coralie stepped forward as the bateau swept up to the bank. A light cance which was towing astern was now east off, and the colonel motioned her to take her place in it.

"I prefer to stay in the large boat," she said, stepping on board. "It is by far the safer of the two."

Lefebre immediately signaled to the man in the stern sheets of the bateau to take the canoe, and followed her without a word. The boatmen saw that his face was gloomy and took their measures accordingly. They knew that the colonel when angry could punish the slightest breach of discipline severely, and they waited for orders.

"Push her off, men," he said, hoarsely. "Why are you wasting time?"

The bateau swung away from the shore, and the cars dropped together into the water. The beatmen set up a rowing song, for which the Canandian voyageurs are so famous, but the colonel stopped them flercely:

"Silence, men," he cried. "Do you suppose we wish to be deafened by your howling?"

The song immediately ceased. The boat quickly roun led the spur of the mountain which lay in their way. The party then disembarked, and Coralie was assisted to her saddle, for horses stood waiting upon the bank.

"Listen to me," he said, hoarsely. "I beg your pard a f r what I have done."

"I am not the one injured," she said, "although it is hard to lose fath in one I have trusted as I have trusted you. Your own conscience must convict you of a great sin."

"I acknowle 'ge it, Coralie, and repent deeply that I still red my feelings to lead me astray. Say that I have not completely lost your esteem, and that I may visit you."

"As a friend of my reputed father you will always be welcome at my home," she answered, quietly, "but not upon the same terms as before." He sprung into the saddle and they rode side by side into the growing city. The guards presented arms to the colonel, the citiz as touched their caps, and various acts showed that he was a man whom it was thought best to conciliate in every way. They rode rapidly through the long lines of white houses and stopped in front of a stone building more pretentions than the rest, built of brown stone after the fashion of the French villas of that day. Coralie dismounted without assistance and a bare-legged boy ran out to take her horse.

"Am I to come in?" whispered the colonel.

"As you like, sir; but I would not advise it at present," she answered, coldly.

The colonel touched his cap with a grim smile, and rode rapidly away and Coralic entered the house. She threw as he hat in the hall and stopped into a room on the right of the great hall, where a white-haired man sat writing.

This was Monsieur Gabriele Lavalle, the reputed father of Condie, a man of wealth and influence, and famous for charity and good deeds.

"Ah, my dear," he said, looking up. "Have you returned to soon? I hope you enjoyed your ride."

"The scenery is very fine from the mountain, father," she sail, "but I did not come to speak of that. Are you very besy?"

"Not so busy but that I can give you a portion of my time, ray dar child," he said, fondly. "What is it you with?"

"You premised me, a short time ago, that you would tell ne all you know of my parent ege," she said. "I claim your promise now."

" Why do you wish it?"

"I will tell you that at some other time, dear father. At present I am easer to know all you can tell."

"That is very little, my dear one," drawing a chair near lim and asking her to sit down. "I hope you are not tired of me?"

"You have been only too kind to an unprotected girl," she sail, taking the seat at his side and throwing an armal it his is a "My wishes have been law in a house where I have hardly the claim of a servant. No father could do not for a doughter than you have done for me. I was not thinking of that, but the thought that I am nameless makes me very sad."

"You are not nameless, Coralie. You have the name of Lavalle, an honorable name and an old one, handed down by a long line of good men and true. I will tell you all I know. Ten years ago, I was walking alone in the poer quarter of Quebec, in the middle of the day. A ragged boy, seeing me passing by, ran out and called to me, and entreated me to come in and see his father, who was very sick. I went in, and found a man lying upon a rude pallet in the last stages of consumption. His skin had that transparent waxen has so often seen in those who are the victims of that terrible disease, and his lips already bore the ashy has of death.

"I drew a chair and sat beside his bed, and as I did to I recognized him. He was at one time color-sorgeant in a cavalry regiment in France—a wild young blade, with a good heart—a man who would do any thing for a friend, and who never forgot a kindness. His name was Jacques Cull in.

"'Jacques," I said, 'I am sorry to see you so low.'

"Almost over; the old soldier of France is very near his end. I did not expect when the boy ran out to call you in, that it would prove to be the man who has been so kind to me in the times long past. I can not talk much, but have a duty to perform. Louis?"

"The boy came in, and kneeled weeping at the ball.

"'Do not weep, my boy,' he said. 'Remember that I have little time to spare and much to do. Bring the small brass-bound box from the chest.'

"The boy sprung up and hurried into a little room which opened into the one in which the sick man lay.

"'Tis a good lad, monsieur,' said Crillon. 'Be kind to him when I am gone, for he is the child of a sellier who has fought for France, though my sins are many. Corale, come in.'

"Then a beautiful child, yourself, dear one, came out of the little room and stood beside the bed. Yes, in poverty, in that poor hut, you were beautiful, and I loved you from that hour, for you were the living image of a little daug ster I lest, many years ago.

- "'You see her, monsieur?' he said, 'this dear child. She is eight years old, and has been more than a daughter to me, but she has not a dictahter's chain upon me. For the boy I have no fear, for he is old enough to take care of himself, but who will shelter this frail flower from the evils which are in the world?'
- "I called you to me, and you climbed upon my knee, and had your golden head against my breast. It had been so long since a little child had nestled there, that I felt my heart warm again, and a hope came into my heart that you would love me, and take the place of the child I had lost. I stopped Crillon as he was about to speak.
- " I think I understand you, sergeant. You wish this child to be provided for?"
- is nothing more for me to hope for or to wish.'
 - " You say that she is not your child?"
 - 66 No.
 - "! You do not know her father?"
- "I can not teil you that. All I know of her is contained in this box,' he sail, pointing to a small box in the hands of the Loy, who had come out of the room with it in his hands." Give it to the gentleman, Louis."
 - "The Loy laid it on my knee, but I did not open it.
- "No need to look at this now, sergeant. As you say, you may die soon, and I wish to set your heart at rest. Would it satisfy you if I took this child to be my own, and reared her up as one of my class?"
 - " Would you do that?' he gasped.
 - "' If you will give her to me.'
- "She is yours! This is more than I hoped for, and I am a ment to die. Louis, look at this gentleman, and remember his name. If the time ever comes when you can be of use to him, and that time may come—for stranger things happen in this world—do it, even to laying down your life for his sale!"
- to take Coralie away ?
 - a. Yes.
 - " 'He need not take that trouble. Coralic and I have arranged it already. I am to take care of her and get rich, an i when we are old enough she is to be my wife.'

"'Hear the boy!' said the serge ont, Lying his hand upon the boy's dark hair. 'He would do it too, if he had his will. Listen to me, Louis. It is a long and hard path by which fame and riches are gained, and in that path this tender child would see much sorrow. This gentleman will give Coralic a home at once, and a happy one, and you can work out your own future. You will not stand in her way?'

"'No,' replied the boy, with a sob; 'but Coralie loves me now, and he will let her forget me, if I go away.'

"You sprung down from my knee and ran to him, and held up your hands:

"'No, no, Louis,' you said. 'I will not forget you, and when you are rich you will come to me, and I will be your wife.'

"The boy raised you in his arms and kissed you, and then set you upon my knee again.

"Take her, monsieur, and be kind to her,' he said. 'It is hard to give her up, but for her sake I can bear it. I promise not to trouble you or her until I have made a name for myself, and when that is done I will come to you.'

"And you shall be welcome, my brave boy," I sail, But why not come with me now? I can give you much help."

"He would not agree to that; neither would his father allow it. They sail I would do enough if I gave you a shelter and a home. While we talked of your fature I saw that Crillon was nearly gone and took his hand. The damp of death was on it, and he beckoned me to bend closer.

"'Keep the box,' he said, 'it may be of use to the child. Take my other hand, Louis. Ki sine, boy; your father is going home. Mother! Wife!

"And with the names of those whom he had loved up a his lips, the soldier of France dish. After the fazeral, I missed Louis, and from that time to this I have never some him. He has not come to me, but from time to time he has sent me a messenger to say that he was deing well and to thank me for my care of you."

"I remember him as a child remembers," she said. "I was only eight years old, and he was fifteen. He is a man now, and I think a noble one. But, why does he not come to us?"

"I do not know. For two years I have not heard from him in any way. God be with him, wherever he may be, for he had a noble heart."

"Did you open the box?"

"No. I have kept it carefully since that time, and if you wish it shall be opened now."

He went to a sort of safe or cabinet in one corner of the roun, which was closed with a peculiar lock, unlike any other in the colony.

"I am provid of my lock," he said, as he turned the key.
"There is only one key in the world which will open it, and that I have in my hands."

The door of the cabinet swung open and revealed a number of articles of value, place and jewelry, and from the darkest corner he took a small brass bound box with a key hanging to it by a string.

"Bring it to the table, father," cric l Coralie, cargerly. "Let me know all I can of my past life."

He brought the box and put it down before her, keeping his han I upon the lid. His face was working strangely, for the old man loved her for the sake of that child so long dead.

"If this box should contain the record which will point out your true father," he said, hoursely, "I shall lose you."

"No, no; you will still be to me the dearest father any orplan ever knew. Open it quickly."

"You shall open it," he said, putting the key in her hand, and dropping his head upon his palm. "I have not the head to do it."

He heard the key turn in the lock, heard the grating of the risty hinges, and Cordie attered an exchanation of surprice. Looking up quickly, he saw the box epon before her, and she was looking will fly into it. The box was empty t

CHAPTER XII.

THE FATAL SIGN.

Antoine, the spy of Colonel Lefebre, did not love his master. He was bound to him by no common tie, for his secrets, which were many and bloody, were in his mater's hands, while he knew enough of the past life of the colonel to work him great evil. Upon his return to the city, after his encounter with the Recluse and his friends, he went at ence to his master, the colonel, and had Lefebre received him kin lly, there is a chance that he might have letrayed what had happened in the cave, and joined the officer in a plot against the Moor and his natter. But the colonel was in a ball humar, having just parted with Coralie, and his first greating of Antoine made the man angry.

"Ha, you have come back, then you coundrel? Way dil

"I came as soon as I could," replied the man sufferly.

"You lie! you have had a bottle of branly under a tree and have been drinking. I know you, you lazy he in 1?"

Antoine remained sullenly silent, a frown up a his dark face.

"Don't put on that face to me unless you wish to go to the halberds, Canadle," cried the colonel. "What have you done?"

"I tried to find the lurking place of the Rechast of Mant Royale but could not. Whether he sunk into the carth I know not, but I could not find him."

"4 You are drunk!"

"Monsieur le Colonel, if I am drun't, take une et and well's me. I have not had a drop since that which you have this this morning."

you," said the colonel. "Let it pass for the process of the Major Leslie's quarters, and tell him that a session of the ter, whom I believe to be a spy, is lurking upon Mont Reyals.

Order him to send out a guard of twelve men to take the person prisoner, alive or dead."

- "Your orders shall be obeyed, sir. Is the guard to go at once?"
- "Yes, you will go with them and do your best to point out the place where he was last seen. If he is taken, I agree to give you ten Louis."

" Agreed! I will do my best."

Half an hour after the detail started in the direction of M at Royale, under the lead of a gray haired sergeant, a man who had served France well for over forty years. Antoing was with them, though he had no real wish to be serviced be to his master, and was far from any design of laying a hand upon the terrible Recluse. The guard proceeded at a brisk pace, but as they crossed the plain which intervened between the city and the mountain, they were met by a young Indian, in the war-dress of the Hurons of the lakes—a stalwart, musce ther young map, in a light buck-skin hunting-shirt, adorned with banks after the Indian fashion, and carrying a gun, knife and hatchet.

He looked keerly at the guard and was passing them without a word, when the sergeant stopped him.

"Can my brother speak the language of his French fathers?" The In lian replied in broken French, but showed sufficient knewledge of the language to make himself intelligible to the sergeant, who was an old woodman, having been in the country for twenty years.

"Who are you?" he demanded.

- "I am Chiardo the Huron, and have come to smoke a pipe with my white brothers, at Montreal. I have news for the great war-chief, Lefebre.".
 - " Have your traveled far ?"
- "From the lodges of the Hurons of the Lakes, who love their French trothers," he said, pointing to his ranged and day mescalins. "What is a long path to Gehardo, when he can do go I for those whom he loves?"
 - " Are the English stirring, then !"
- to count the scalps they have lost since the Hurons were last upon the war-path."

"An Indian will brag, no matter how brave he may be," said the sergeant turning to his companions. "Have you crossed Mont-Royale?"

"This?" asked the Indian, pointing to the mountain te-

" Yes."

- "Gehardo would not make a longer path because the way is rough. He came by that path."
 - "Did you see any one upon the mountain?"
- "Yes. A spirit walks upon the mountains, the ghost of a white man with white hair upon his face which comes down to his knees. It is the spirit of the rocks and trees, and his face was under a cloud. Gehardo, who fears not man, trembled in the presence of the white spirit."

"Where did you see him?"

- "He stood upon a rock leaning upon a staff. His eyes were living coals; his voice was as the voice of the Great Spirit when he speaks in the clouds, and the Indians hav themselves. Let my brothers turn back," he said persuasively laying his hand upon the breast of the sergeant, "and let him not face the White Spirit when his anger is hot."
- "We must go on," said the sergeant. "If you are not too weary, I would have you go back with us and show us where you saw this White Spirit."
- "Gehardo can not go back. His face is set toward the great wigwam of the French, and he can not go back with his work is done. Let not my brothers be an my with Gehardo, because he does as his chief common ls."

"Pass on then," said the sergeant, "we also have a daily to perform."

The Indian moved on with a rapid step, and was quickly lost to sight, and the sergeant gave the order to advance. They had scarcely taken a dozen steps when Antoine uttered a cry of terror, and turning, they saw him holding in his tall a small piece of silver, worked into the diagn of two creat swords, his eyes half starting from his head.

"What is that?" asked the screent, taking it from his hand, quickly." "Where did you find it?"

"It was hanging on the skirt of my coat," said Antoine, with pale lips trembling with fear.

"Where did it come from?"

"How can I tell? It was not there when I came out of the city."

Why, man, you are frightened; your lips are white as ashes, and your face is deadly pale. What does this mean?"

"Nothing," stammered Antoine, appulled at so soon receiving the signal of warning which the Reclue had promised to send, if he became slack in his duty. "I—l—don't understand it, that is all."

all." We are wasting time," said the sergeant. "Forward,

They quickened their pace, and were soon climbing the smooth siles of the mountain, threading their way through the thick trees. Antoine had fallen behind, and as they passed through a deep thicket, he suddenly de-appeared. If they had noticed his departure and gone back to look for him, they would have seen him lying prostrate on the sod, with the foot of Abah on his breast, and the Recluse standing over him with a stern face. The footsteps of the soldiers died away in the distance and Abah, obeying a sign from the Recluse, removed his foot from the breast of the fallen man, and suffered him to rise.

"You have broken your faith early, Antoine," said the Recluse. "What have you to say for yourself to save your life?"

- "I swear by the saints that I have not been faithles," pleaded Antoine. "The colonel was dissatisfied with my report, and ordered me to accompany the guard to the mountain."
 - " For what purpose?"
 - "To take you prisoner."

" Upon what ground?"

"Upon the ground that you are a spy in the service of the English," replied the man, carnestly. "I could do nothing to step him, and you ordered me to go back to him and obey him, but to report to you."

"I believe you," said the Rechee. "When you return to your master, take this paper and lay it on his table. Do not let him see you put it there, but keep a watch upon him, and tell me what he does when he reads it. Make haste now, and rejoin the soldiers, and have no fear of any thing they can do to me. I am over and above such petty annoyances."

Autoine hurried on, and found the soldiers clustered topether, eagerly discussing their future course. They had missed Antoine, and concluded that he had taken flight and turned back.

"Diables, Antoine!" cried the sergeant. "What a fright you have been in. You must not hang back in this manner or you will feel the weight of my hand."

"I hurt my foot and had to stop," replied Antoine. "I am no more frightened than yourself, screent, and we are wasting time here. You will never catch this Will-o'-the-wisp of whom you are in pursuit."

"Fools!" cried a hollow voice close at hand. "Go back to your matter and tell him that the Reclue of Mont Royals is not to be taken by such as he.".

The voice seemed to come from the woods close at hand; and, shouting to his men to follow, the sergeant sprung forward in the direction of the voice. They penetrated the woods a short distance, when a burst of savage laughter in the same voice sounded upon the spot they had just left, and all paused in utter confusion and dismay.

"What means this?" whi-pered the sergeant. "It is witch-craft."

"You pursue a phantom," cried the same voice from another quarter. "Dogs, minions of a petty despot, fly for your lives! The soldiers of Lefebre shall never lay a hand upon the Rechae of Mont Royale!"

"This way," roared the sergeant, drawing his swird.

Again he direct in the direction of the voice, and again lecame back, bathed and confused. The sergeant pausel, as I wipe I the cold perspiration from his ferchead. He was a man not easily frightened, but this was conacthing beyond him, something which he did not understand. The conactn soldiers were trembling, and Antoine looked trium; hant.

"Let us go back," he said. "The Indian was right, and we are fighting a shadow. You never can take this strange bring."

"Show yourself," shrieked the sergeant. "Come out and face a man without a stain."

Hocking laughter was the only reply frem an entirely difform part of the woods—strange sounds sound to surround the m—hollow, murmuring sounds, piercing the murky atmospiere. A sense of oppression, of utter dread, seemed to hem them in. The sergeant was not naturally superstitious, and yet he could not understand or explain the e strange phenomena.

"One more effort," he said, "and then if we fail I shall be rolly to believe with you that we are under a spell. Show me the place where the colonel met this strange being."

Antoine led the way in silence to the crest of the mountain and came to the spot where the encounter had taken thee. Stooping, he picked up from the earth the fragments of the colonel's sword and handed them to the sergeant.

"You know the temper of the blade the colonel wore, and that it is not easily broken; yet he tells me that he thrust it at the heart of this old man, and it broke like paper against his treast. Can we fight against such a creature as that?"

"It is hopeless, I fear," replied the sergeant, "and yet I can not give it up. If I could only see him-"

"Look this way," cried a hollow, passionless voice, like a sound from the grave.

All eyes were turned in the direction of the sound, and there, standing upon the verge of the forest, twenty paces away, was the strange being known as the Rechise of the Montain. The sergeant was about to rush forward, when the hand of the strange man was lifted and he paused.

"Stop," he said. "You think that I am one of your order, and that what you have seen and heard is nothing but fancy. I will prove what I am to you. You have a pistol in your belt; is it loaded?"

[&]quot; It is."

[&]quot;You can aim straight?"

^{: &}quot;I think so."

[&]quot;The year piral art fire a my bear'. I give you leave."

[&]quot;My end is were to take you alive. Be really, men."

[&]quot;Fool! You can not take me, but do as I command."

The sergment took the piscol from his left, cocked it, and aimed at the immovable breast of the Recluse. Twice he lowered it, being a brave man, but a taunting laugh from the Recluse made him angry and he fired. The smoke floated slowly upward, and they saw the Recluse put his head into his bosom, take out the belief and cut it at the feet of the scregant. Human nature could stand no more, and, with yells of terror, the soldiers turned and fled down the nountainsies, eager only as to who could be first in the city of Montreal.

CHAPTER V.

THE MURDEROUS COMPACT.

Night in the city of Montreal, deep and dark. A sclemn stillness rested upon it, save where now and then the call of the sentry announced the safety of his post, or whom a patrol or guard-relief passed swiftly by on some secret medical. The lights were out in nearly every house, but one burned in the library window of Monsieur Lavalle, and he was there, but not alone. Lefebre was with him, seated at the other side of the table with a savage look upon his han before face.

"Once more I ask you, Monsieur Lavalla, if I obtain your daughter's love, will you give your consent?"

"I make no promises in advance, my dear colonel. If Coralic should love you, far be it from the to stand in the way of her happiness. But, from what I have heard her say, I doubt if there is any hope for you."

"Have your own way, monsiour," said the color, health aly, "But you must beware of one thing. Look out that her father dies not come to life to disposes you of the daughter year love."

"What do you mean? Who told you any thing, Lefebre?"

"Never mind that now. I am not easily build, and I have sworn to make this lady my wife. No one shall come between us, and if he does he goes down. Look to yourself, for you have made me your enemy."

"This interview had better end, colonel," sail Lavalle.

rising. "I am not accu tomed to threats, ner will I endure them, even from you."

"I have not threatened you, sir, nor have I any is tention of delay so. As you desire to terminate this interview, I will have you, with the under tending that you soon hear from me again."

Livellering a bell at his elbow and a servant entered.

"Show C'donel Lefe're out, Henri, and bear in mind that I am a fat home to him at any time until further orders. You may instruct your fellow servants in this respect. Colonel Lefebre, good-night."

The colored lowed low, and walked out quietly. In the crillr he met Coralle, who was passing him with a quiet nod, when he stopped her by a gesture.

"Extra medemois lie; I have something to communicate."

"Be squill as pessible, colored, as it is getting late."

"I shall not detain you long. I merely wish to inform you that your father has feebilden me the house. Was this done at your request?"

"I know nothing of it, but no doubt you gave him good cause."

and I bid you good-night." That is all I wi hed to know,

As the door closed upon him, Lefebre stepped and leoked be known that the horse. There was something fearful in the look with which he regarded it, and if Condie had seen him then, sie most have been satisfied that he was a lead man at heart.

"No that I have been insulted," he muttered, "I shall but it beart to go to work. But, this Recluse is a heavy but not not be. Whereast chart is he? What does be knowed that I would give tenth of the I would give tenth of the I had to have that he is under the soil."

the sod, whoever he may be."

Indicate the figure lay, with his hand upon his sword, and saw a man to line of so by, watching him.

"Wiratherile

"Add perise man," replied the other. "You mentioned a large sug of mency. I should be glid to carn it."

243

" Your name?"

What are names to you or me? Call me any name you like, but employ me. I give you my word that when you spoke your the whits about just now I was on the point of knocking you down for the sake of any valuables you might have about you. I have changed my mind, and would like to have you employ me."

"Do you know the way to Colon I Lefebre's quarters?"

" Yes."

" Have you the word?"

" I have."

"Then proceed at once to the colonel's quarters and slow this ring to the guard and tell him that you were instructed by the man who gave you this to wait in the half until he comes. I think you are the man I want, but I can tell letter when I see how you look."

The man took the ring and strede rapilly away, while the colonel stood for a moment in deep thought, and then followed the stranger slowly. The mement he was gene a dark figure stole out of the shadow of the building and followed him with a rapid, noiseless tread, for enough behind not to be easily detected. But the colonel was a wary man, and he had not gone many steps when he became satisfied that since one was following him. He made no sign to in his te this knowledge, but kept on his courie, with his hand upon the hilt of a pistol ready for action, until he met the part d, who stopped him. Having given the word, he becken a the geant in charge of the patrol to come characters.

"Some one follows me," he will. "So who it is, and if he is one who can not give an account of himself, but I have to the guard-house."

The patrol moved away and the dark torre which had followed the colonel came to a stand, and hole by a laly at thim.

"Advance, and give the word."

Instead of oblying the sammors, the presunt time to the his hed and run swiftly down a norrow to total the right. The patrol instantly stated in public, but they might as well have the elithe wind. When they reached the entrance to the street the object of their suspicion was already out of sight, and they could not hear the sound of his feet.

"The devil!" mettered the ser, ant. " Now what shall we say when we report this in the morning?"

"My solvice is to say nothing about it, my sergeant," said one of the men. "It can only get us into trouble, and it is not our facilities we can not catch a fellow who runs like a fox."

"That is true," said the sergeant. "Let us agree then upon one stery, in case the colonel should make inquiries. The large a four to be a citizen who know the word, and gave a good account of himself."

" Agreed."

"Forward then, was enfants!" said the sergeant, in a cheerful tone. "Let us do our duty."

The feet of the patrol had scarcely ceised to sound when the same dark flure stole out of the narrow street, and befor the colin. I had gene a dezen squares he was again folliwed and watched. But, this time the spy was more careful, and the colinel did not detect him, until he stepped in front of his own quarters, and received the salute of the guard at the door.

at I now waits for you in the Lall, men colonel," said the man.

"Very well," replied the colonel. "I sent him here to await my orders. Has Antoine come in?"

" Yes, mon colonel."

"H. Sanat Darney been here to report?"

" H has, men careful, and now waits in the hall."

To a detail possed the count and entered the ball, where he is also recent Daries and intoine convertion in ever terms, and the man he hads not in scated in one center of the hall, fast asleep.

"Follow me, or ant," will Lefebre. "You are to conce also, Antoine."

In two men followed him solutions by to his private rank and the law didn't his enders. The colonel was in no harm for he get out a bottle of brandy, filled a burner for each man, and poured out a little for himself.

- Drink that off before you begin, my men, 'he sail, " at I then I will hear your report. I drink to yea."
- "And I to you, men colonel," said the ergent. 'Are you ready to hear my report?"
 - "Have you been successful?"
 - " No."
- "Then make your story as short as you can, and get it done."

Sergeant Darmay was not a man to waste words, and in as brief space as possible he told all that had happen d that afternoon upon Mont Royale. Lefebre he rd him in sikn e, toying carelessly with his glass as he proceeded, and consionally taking a sip from the contents.

"I am not surprised that you failed, Sorgeant Dorney," he said, when the report was finished. "You had no common man to deal with, and I am far from cortain that I so all have succeeded any better in person. I believe that you have done all that was possible under the circumstance, and I reflect no discredit upon your for your failure. You say that you had a fair shot at this strange being?"

"At twenty paces, colonel. You know that I am not likely to miss a fair mark at that distance, and I am sure the bullet struck him over the heart."

- "Yet he plucked it from his clothing and flung it back at you?"
 - " He did."
 - "What became of him then?"
- "He disappeared, fadel out of sight like a vision. I am not ashamed to say that I cil not step to bek for him alter that."
- "Your report is accepted, scrucant, and you may recall to your quert is. If I is od you man I will send you man! You may to too, Antoine, and as you pess that the the last awake the turn who is sleeping there, and brief which to ill deer of my reem. And hook you, do not during a grant my door after that, but retire to you recall at the "

"Yes, colonel," said Antoine, humbly.

A moment after the nan who had been in while rappel at the door and was admitted at once. The colonal behalf keenly at him as he entered, and pelated to a chair. The man took the stat indicated, and the two looked at each other in silence for full two minutes. The stranger was clothed in garmen's which had once been of rich stuff but were now fall had wern. A certain junity air indicated that he had once maked in the higher run held life, but his face was that of one maked in the higher run held life, but his face was that of one maked prematurely aged by excess and riot. The prominent expression was of complete reckles ness, as of a person who cared nothing for his future course. His frame was powerful, and he was still active and strong.

"What do you require of me? I tell you beforehand that I am so eare! sof my fortune that it matters nothing to me how do prate the adventure I am edied upon to undertake if the sacces of the enterprise is repaid in money to a sufficient amount."

"You ever heard what I said when I came out of that house totight. Could you take upon yourself to put an obnoxious person out of the way?"

"I said so. What is a man's life? I have had my own in my hand, ready to yield up for the last ten years. I care nothing for the life of any one, if it stands in my way. Who is this you wish to see put under the soel?"

"There is a per on who haunts Mont Royale. He is known as the Red see—an old man, who walks with a staff, and has a large gray heard reaching to his waist. This creature has its doctors by references to events in my past life which I will be present, and I will give a large sum to know that he is no more."

I lead that will you give for this knowledge? Of course I lead that you will not offer the amount which you named the life in the part of the life say it repeated what you regard this man's life as worth."

"Two thousand Louis'."

"k'aid when you being me detain evidence that he is dead."

"Whe would you regard as contain evidence?"

"I as .- t see the body or a part of it."

" How much time do you give me for the work?"

"It must be done quickly. The longer he lives, the more danger I am in. He must not be allowed to come to More treal, or to see a lady who resides here, who is called Coraliz Lavalle."

"Are you particular as to the manner in which he in 's his death?"

"I am not. By steel, bullet or poison, as you like."

"You are a cool hand, mon colonel," said the man, quickly.
"It is a pleasure to talk with you, for you colon to the point at once and call things by their right names. It give to your terms, and will endeavor to carry out your plans at once. You say that he larks in Mont Royale: may I ask if he has a habitation of any kind there?"

"I do not know. You must lie in wait for him until he shows himself, and then do your work. What shall I call you?"

"Call me, Neville. I had a name once, as proud as the proudest; but I have lost my claim to it long ago—am numeless, homeless, friendless, the tool of any man who is willing to pay me for the strength that is in my arm. I had better keep this ring you have given me, as a means of gaining access to you readily."

"Yes. Let us drink to the success of your work."

The brandy was poured out, and the man called Neville held his glass up to the light and watched the gleams in its clear depths.

"Ay, sparkle and shine, seducing liquid. This it is that led me a tray; this it is which drove me out it in the solicly of my kind and made me a murderer and outlaw. This it is that toust: To the speedy death of the Reclass of Mont Republic.

"To the death of the Rechee of Mont Royale," report 1 Colonel Lefebre.

"Fools," cried a solemn voice. "His life is not at the mercy of such villains as you!"

CHAPTER VI.

THE MISSING PAPERS.

The glass dropped from the raised hand of Colonel Lefebre and was shivered to fragments at his feet, while Neville, where nerves were under better control, looked up with a largh.

"A spy," he said in a whisper. "By the powers we will have him out, and he is no better than a dead man, whoever he may be."

A hollow laugh filled the room, and the colonel sat trembling, not strong enough to raise his hand from the table. His fear was infectious, for Neville began to look blankly at his employer.

"Do you recognize the voice?"

"Yes; it is the voice of the man you are to kill, the Recluse of Mont Royale."

"Ha! you say well that this is no common man," said Noville, springing to the window. "I will see to this."

It is an open the blind and looked out. As he did so a start is minuted the dark, so outside, and he received a blow which sent him recling to the floor. He recovered in an instant, and, with a cry of rare, sprung at the window and leged to the earth, eight feet below. Lefebre heard him running to and fro in eager haste, but he so neame back and Clarked into the window with a look of deep surprise upon his face.

"It I were not a reasonable men I should say that this was the work of the devil himself," he hissed. "I can find no trace of a year about the hease, and the grand says that nobody he produced his part. You have good reason to fear this man, who we have he may be. No oblione over dealt such a blow as that which I received five minutes ago."

"He struck me ence, and nearly broke my arm," said the celonel. "Pick up fast paper on the floor; it was not there tcl. re."

Neville stooped and raised the paper and east his eyes hastily over it and laid it down before Lefebre.

"For you," he said, quietly. Lefebre drew the light nearer and boked at the document with wildly dilating eyes.

"Beware!" it said. "The measure of your guilt was full, long since, and your doom is near at hand. Were to you and yours when that doom is pronounced. The phosts of your murdered victims have come about me by hight and taked me why you are spared so long, and I can not answer them. Do no wrong to Coralie Lavade, or to the good old man who gives her a home, lest a worle thing happen to you. Your new tool will find to his cost what it is to deal with.

"THE RECLUSE OF MONT ROYALE."

"He is a hold fellow, by heaven," said Neville, bringing his clenched hand heavily down upon the table. "It will be worth my while to pit myself against him, but I shall conquer in the end."

"You think he was here in person?" sail Lefebre, trembling. "Is can to feel his presence near me now."

"Not a doubt in my mind that he knows that I am his enemy. What of that? If I do not fear, you need net."

"I do not fear him," replied the colonel, locking alout him in a manner which belied his words. "He need net think to frighten me."

"Is there any other work for me to do after he is under the sod?" : - ~~

"Plenty of work, if you can accomplish this. You shall roll in riches if you can do what you have premise h."

"I shall do it," replied Neville. "Come closer to me and I will tell you my plans."

And the two sat by the table drinking deeply, and perfecting the plot which was to work the downfall of their con is

Meanwhile, those enemies were not idle. In the crown is three filters at leastly to the back part of the ball is a contract once opened and a limit dethem. The crown is opened the door was Antoine, who cast terrivel allows at the three souder filters wrappel in long cleaks from here to foot, but did not reter a word. They felle well him at the through the silent house, walking with cautious step, and he did not feel at case until the door of his own room was clearly upon them. Then one of them let his local drop from his face and i.e saw the long, white beard, pale face and gleaming eyes of the Recluse.

- "So far you have been faithful, my friend," he said. "But, were to you if you dare to break faith even in thought. These men are still over their bottle?"
 - " Y' ...
 - " Do you think they will call for more liquor?"
- In an hour's time my master will be tired of the are decimal all for a favorite wine, which is kept in yonder closet."
 - "Is it in bottles?"
 - " Yes."
 - "Do you uncork it, or does he?"

" I generally do that."

- "Very god. You will take this small bottle, and hold it in your last as you take out the cork. Without being seen by enter of them you must manage to drop the contents into the bottle."
 - " I-I dare not."
 - " You dare not; beware!"

"Is it poison?" gasped Antoine.

No, f. 1! I give you my word that the quantity in this I tile will do no pernament harm to any one. It will put the mit stop and leave me at liberty to search the room, as I must do before I have this house. Come, say the word; do you obey or not?"

" I obey."

- "Yer will do well. Obey me in every thing and your from is made. You are not doing the will of a despotic mater, but you are belowing in behalf of the innocent against the guilty. What is that bell?"
 - " From my meet r's rem. It cal's for me."

"Go then, but be cautious."

And in Larried out and was gone but a few moments.

here?"

" No."

, "The note in it, and since you are so squeamish, I will put the note the in with my own hand."

Antoine went into the closet and quickly appeared with a bottle of wine and a corkscrew. He threw off the wire and lead and drew the cork, and the delicate aroma of the jerre liquor fills d the room. The Recluse emptied the contents of the small vial into the lottle, shook it up well and replaced the cork lightly.

he will be asleep, and we can work with safety. Our course may not be right in the eyes of the law, but it is the course of justice and truth. I will wait here until you return, Antoine."

The servant went out with the wine, and shortly returned, with a pale, scared face.

" Did they drink of the wine?" said the Recluse, sternly.

"Yes," he said. "Oh, if you have deceived me—if it turns out to be poison!"

"Poison, you blockhead! Am I a man likely to commit a murder?"

"I don't know—you hate this man so much," murmured Antoine. "But, you promise to bear me blameless."

"We will so arrange it that it will seem to be the work of robbers, friend Antoine," said the Recluse; "you shall be bound hand and foot when we leave you."

Half an hour passed, and the three stole silently to the door of the colonel's room and listened. All was silent as the grave. The Reclase looked through the keyhole, and saw that a light yet burned and the two men were sitting at a table with their heads resting upon it, as if askep

"All safe," he said. "Come in, all of you, but be very careful how you step."

They entered the room, and to make sure that the shaping men did not awake too soon, they were bound and gan al, and build upon the floor. The shutters of the apartment had been closed after Neville leaped out in search of the can roof the voice who had interrupt I them over their a factors plans. The Recluse did not waste time, but a table with the cabinet which stood in the room. It was open I with some difficulty. A mass of papers were turnoled out upon the table, and two of the men began to turn them over eagerly, evidently searching for particular enes. The search for a time seemed likely to be unsuccessful, for nothing rewarfel their search. That the object was not robbery was plain, for various articles of value were to-sed aside careles, ly when they came in their way. At last one of them took up an old fashing limitature and tossed it to the Rochase.

"The is something," cried the strange man, eagerly. "The pagers must be here, for they were together."

"Desthis look like it?" said the other, throwing a parchnext acres the table. The Recluse unfolded it, looked hurrially at the contents and uttered a low exclamation of joy.

"Form!!' he cried, excerly, "after years of sorrow and in-form! at last! Come away, friends; our work here is done !"

CHAPTER VII.

LOUIS CHASTELLAR AND LE SABREUR.

Colonial Lerenge was found by the servants next morning lying upon his back in an uncomfortable position, his feet lying acres the body of Neville, who was in a like unlargey small. We will pass over the various phases of ornamental Casphemy through which they passed, when they once in resolution the use of their tongues. When Lefebre saw his extinct in confacion, papers to adabout the floor, gold and jouchs glomaing everywhere, he uttered a cry of distancy well spring to collect the scattered papers. He knew by a species of intuition exactly what papers he should miss, the first was like ashes as he scarched for them, knowing all the that his starch was in vain.

"What have you led?" d manded Neville.

I have at any secidie. All my plans are balled if I can at recover them; my very life is in danger."

"Who do you think has it?"

of Mont Royale."

"He!" said Neville. "I must get to work, if I am to carn two thousand Louis' to-day. How light my head feels! I might almost think I had been drugged. By the way; do you remember whether that wine was touched or not when your fellow brought it in last night?"

"I think it was not," said the colonel. "Yes it was though."

"I remember, if you do not," said Neville. "The bottle was uncorked, for I remember that the fellow had the corkscrew fixed in the top when he came in, and whipped it out smartly as he set the bottle down. Is there any left in the bottle?"

"Very little."

"Hough for my purpose," said Neville, shaking the lottle.
"If it is drugged, I can find it out as easily from a drop as from a gollon. I have a frient in St. James who is a chemist, and with your permission I will take this down and get him to test it."

"Do so; prove to me that Antoine has played me false and his doom is sealed."

Antoine, who had been released some time before, was now spying at the key-hole. He knew his danger, if that liquor ever came into the hands of a chemist. Death would be his portion, for the colonel would not forgive an injury like this.

"The bottle must never so to the clemit's," he muttered.

" At any hazard, I must stop that."

"Never mind it just now, Neville," said Lefebre, parting the bottle in the cabinet. "We have not the time to waste upon such small game as Antoine until our main energy is disposed of. That ence done, I will find a way to settle with my servant, if he is guilty.".

Antoine breathed more freely. If was reprieved, and it would give him a chance to stead the bettle before they the 12th of it again. While they were yet in consultation, a man came up to say that an Indian wished to see the colonely

" An Indian?" said Lefebre.

"Yes; a Huron."

"Ah; I will go down and see him, for it is the reliey of the Marquis to keep on good terms with the red knaves."

He went down, and foun! the young brave whom the guard hall, waiting for him.

" What is your wish will me?" demanded the colonel.

The War chief sent motors by that the Year chief sent motors by that the Year established show that our French father is all out to drive them out of the Mohawk country. A waite chief who is with the Haron sent this."

And from I neath his banket the young chi f drew out a pair which he handed to the colonel. It was a dipatch from a sout who had been working in the section to the work of Time in the file nature of the provide an exclusive not disput.

"Harman in the to say, Hureat?"

"Yes; jest ricy as I crossed the mountain I met your your raid, who had searching for the Grayboard who dwels in the mountains. I teld them I had seen him and they went the reason. My father, I have seen him again."

" Where; when?"

- of a chief is not double."
 - "When did you see him?"

" Last night."

"Where ?"

His to held two mathedread widwards of the whitemen. His to held the a shadow, and he spoke words of terror in the east of General Listen, my brother. I have seen the sky when the Great Spirit is anary. I have booked on the highest reconstant, when the stormy wind was at play, and I half not tremble. Yet, Gehardo fears the Graybeard. His playment the Haran heard his voice, and trembled, and obeyed his commands."

" What were they?"

this."

As lo spile happed his hand into his boson and draw out not a well his placed in the hand of the colonel. Lefebre spired as the placed in the hand of the colonel. Intered a cry of a my term is to be in. The in movable face of the Indian data at the colonel, evently surprised at his colonel, evently surprised at his contain.

"You red villain," he sereamed. "How dare you bring this to me?"

"Does my brother ask the question? Who would dare to disobey the words of the Graybeard, whose anter would be terrible?" Gehardo has done his bidding and now he will go."

The Indian wrapped his blanket about him and stalked away, unbeeding the call of the colonel to return. Lefebre picked up the ring and looked at it closely.

for fifteen years. How then has it come back to me? Oh, my God, will punishment never cea e? Must all the evils of my life come home to me now? Poor, wrongel, beautiful Juliette, the man who sent you to your grave will never know a happy hour. Yet I was not all to blame. He came—he stole you from me, and I never forgot nor forgave the injury. I must go on in my work, and never falter nor turn back, even though you rise from your grave to accuse me."

He hid the ring in his bosom and went back slowly to the room in which he had left Neville. Half an hour after the accomplice left the city and moved toward the northern end of the island, walking swiftly as one who had a duty to perform.

At the Three Lilies, at that time the principal inn of Montreal, a gay party of young officers were sitting over their wine, hoasting of their conquests and talking of the deals they were to do when the Great Marquis perfected his place for the destruction of the English settlements and ferts in upper New York, when a young man came in and took a so that one of the tables and called for a pint of wine. He was talked strong, and would have been remarkably hand one, but for a paculiar scar which crossed the lower part of his face, and draw his mouth to one side, giving his face an odd expression, as if continually laughing. The young officers leaded up and stopped their convertation for a moment, and then went on as before.

"As I live by the sword I thought him one of the nollest yearn; fellows I ever knew, and even now, with the plain proofs we have of his guilt, I can not think of him as a felon.'

"What was his crime?"

"He was not only a spy of the English but he nobbed the callies of their pay by means of ralse certificates and orders from the adjutant."

" Was not our colonel adjutant, at that time, Erne?"

"Yes; and he thought no one in the world equal to Chastellar. He was one of the old count's pets, a fellow who had forght his way up from the ranks, and reached the grade of equal by good ended. I liked him immensely and was extup sorely when he went to the bad."

The year man at the table poured out a glass of wine at 11 to 1 fix lly at the specker. Some unknown emotion some 1 struckling in his breast, but he kept silent.

"It was a bally swarlsman too," said the speaker again.
"Yorks or that I play well, for some of you have tried me, to I was an induct in his hands. A Le Sabreur him off well has had trouble to keep that deadly point of his breast; poor Louis."

" Was there no doubt of his guilt, then?"

"The count did not tool it so, and he was condemned, but not not to expect to an it. Since then I have never seen then, but if he is living good by k go with him, for the best of men will sometimes go astray."

At this meant the deropmed and a small, compactlylight prima with a sinister face, came swagnering in. He hall evil antly been drinking, and from the meaner in which the years mean holded at him, it was plain that they reported him as a person to be avoided. He holded about him with a successor smill, and sat down at the table or a lightery or a truly a believed him with a bantering sneer.

ously. "Here, waiter; a pint of Canary."

the second the pour part to the your part of the your part and white end answered by a continuous to the new-comer langued being terously.

"That's right, lieutement; warn him against me, for he needs it. I must fight some one to day, if I can find a man who knows how to turn his girdle."

The stranger made no reply but quietly moved his wine to the next table and turned his back upon the bully. He had sourcely done so, when the follow research snatching the glass form the table drank of the contents and threw the chapter to buy a the door. The continuously is one had a low, he was lying in the apposite corner, with the bottoms of his does expect to the public over. He was an his feet in an instant, with a vicious book in his twichling gray eye, the blood triedding from a cut in his lip. A marnor of applicate was finite heard, and that will have graved from how to happened, with a look which they up broad the large gray distinguished the blow the strangers at down holding calmy at the angry bully.

"Your attention, if you please, monsieur whatever your name is," soil the man who had been knocked down, who had berious politeness. "As a favor to you, I permit you to dis by my sweet. You will, therefore, rise and receive your death."

"A moment, sir," said the young man, quietly. "This young officer has kindly mentioned that you are called Le Sabreur, and are the famous, or rather infamous, duelist of that name. Do you insist on crossing blakes with mar? I have no one here who can give me help if I am imposed upon."

"If you will ber my pardon on your knees I will not let you escape. Come; to your grand and quickly."

The stranger rose, and threw off his outer cont, revealing powerful not cles and long arms, the model of a sword man. Be did not seem in any hurry or the lost discomposed, as I took his position as careles by as if about to play with the buttons on the foils.

"I will stand by you, if you will permit it, measier," will the officer, who had spoken of Louis Chastellar, coming firward. "You need a friend."

"He needs enough to carry out his wear. I bely," aid Le Sabreur, farcely. "Are you realy?"

" Ready !"

"Get to work," said Erne. "Stand back, gargen. Do you interfers when gentlem a propert to settle a little affair in your house?"

"But, gentlemen!" cried the landlord.

" () A ver feel," said line. " Play, centlemen."

The shall have enough with a stump his, and the stranger, with a moving an inch from his aist traverse, and with no notice of any part of his person, except his waist and forearm, part of the terrible blade of he Sabreur with the createst case, with a calmandle upon his face. The dualist because to look dealership, and so maker, in his laste, he have the stranger and are readily, with he only took advantage of by touching the duelist lightly over the heart.

"I had you then, monsiour. Pak! you would do well to drop this. I do not wish for your life."

"You not take it or long your own," his od Le Sabreur, the alg. He no bener despised his ante enit, for he saw in him a master of fence, and one far his superior.

"You are tampting your own face," will the stranger, charging his term and he inning to a walt in his turn. Here, she is neart their blads intertwened, and then the stranger took a backward step and bore hard upon his hilt. The sace her Le Schrear was tern from his grasp and struck the flore hard adult clutter. It was done so suddenly that only one man saw how the work was done and that was Erne.

do it."

The stranger sto pel and picked up the sword of Le Salver and handed it to him, helding it by the blade. The value size life of the proportion of his are said to a public that no one could interfere, and nothing the histograms was bride address and lightness and nothing the histograms will yet be hik with the point down, but, by the histograms of his help, he allowed to point to pass their histograms and the next memorial he selected as any the first or, fill the way have from that powerful it thand.

more to do with him."

Note of the officers would help the cowardly brute, but, at an order from the landlord, three waiters lifted the sense-less form and carried it into another room.

Gentlemen," said the stranger, "you have my sincere thanks for giving your support to an unknown man, who has not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with any of you. At another time I shall take delight in knowing you. Landlord."

" Yes, monsieur."

" Can you give me a bed here? I am fatigued by a long journey and desire rest."

The landlord obsequiously led the way, and Erne looked after the stranger with a long-drawn breath.

"How dare he come here?' he muttered. "By heaven, it is death to Lim if he falls alive into the hands of Lefebre."

"What is the matter with you, Erne?" said one of his companions, gayly. "You look as if you had seen a ghest."

Erne laughed it off, but was evidently ill at case. They were still talking over the matter, glad that the minion of Lefebre had met his match, when Le Sabreur came slowly from the next room. His face was drawn with pain and the blood was still oozing slowly from a cut over his eye.

"You have not seen the last of me, gentlemen. I shall have the pleasure of seeing this fine sword-man shot before a week is out. I know him, Lieutenant Erne Celestin."

Without another word he walked quickly out of the room, leaving the young men looking at each other with a toni homent depicted on their faces. Erne Celestin rose scon after and left the house, and watched the discomfied daelit until he was certain that he was making his way toward the cohonel's quarters; then he turned quickly on his heel and went back to the Three Lilies. He did not enter at the front, it is caring to meet his companions, but presing through an alleyway he came into the house by the back way and found one of the sculliens, busy at work in the small room to the right

" Do you wish to earn a crown quickly, my boy?" be -!!.

"I am always willing to do that, monsieur lieutenant," said the boy.

"Then take this card, and find the room of the gentleman who fought just now with Captain La Sabreur."

Howrote a sentance on the card and gave it to the boy, who harried into the howe and came back directly.

"The gentleman will be you," he sail. "Come this may."

"Take me up by the back staircase," whispered Erne. "I

The boy in bled, and led the way by a dirty staircase, used only by the servants, to the upper part of the house, and stopped at a door.

"This is the room, monsieur."

Here took one a Louis and placed it in the boy's hand. "He post at about this and I will remember it in the time to come. You can go."

He could the door without ceremony and the stranger rose to meet him.

"You can not hille your olf from me after I have seen your sword-play, Louis Chastellar," said Erne, holding out his law has "Have you no greating for an old friend?"

(.. ": h r, for it was indeed ha, prosped the extended hand warmly.

"On thirz which made the enforced exile I am enduring name trill, was the parting from you, Erne. I am glad to be able to press your hand again."

*You are in danger here," said Celestin. "The man you full linews or supects who you are and has gone to Lefestic's quarters. You must escape, and at once. A guard will a line to be in five minutes, for it is a short walk to the errors. It is dark now; let up a t into the street, and you may escape."

"I have not due to before," will Cheet Mar, be insing to buckle on his sword-belt. "Hark!"

The consect assued feet was heard upon the floor below.

"Away, for your life!" cried Colestin. "I will show you the way. The guard is here already."

The value of the narrow passers, first taking the precaution to lock the door.

tate, for I know the way."

He spring down the narrow third is, while Erro harried back. Just as he came into the side á marger he heard the catter of swords in the rear of the building. Chastellar had met enemies there!

CHAPTER VIII.

HUNTED DOWN.

Coralle was in the library at Lavalle's house, trying to fix her attention upon a book. The night was dark, and after a while she gave up the attempt at reading and opened the window looking upon the street. Just then a tumult arose and alarm bells rung; she heard the rush of hurried feet, and a man, panting for breath, and bleeding from several wounds, came staggering by. The noises increased more and more all about him and he paused in despair, looking around for some avenue of escape. Seeing her at the open window he sprung forward at once.

"Lady," he gasped "you see an unfortunate but innocent man, beset by enemies, and severely wounded. In the name of our common humanity, I ask you to give me shelter.'

"Come in," she whispered.

He entered the window slowly, and she closed it belind Lim; then drew down the blind. It was not done a moment too soon, for they heard the rattline of arms, and a patrol pulsed quickly, meeting another party just below the house. They carried torches, and the foremost of the first party aldressed the last.

"Have you seen him?"

"Non; but he can not escape, for Lefebre has set a cordon about him. Every street is guarded close."

"Then he is either in the Rue Paris or Montcalm. Take the Rue Paris; we will take the other."

The parties separated, hurrying down opposite streets, and Coralie, who had been watching them through the interstices of the blind, turned to the man she had saved. As he saw her face by the light of the lamp he uttered a low cry of surprise.

" C' ' be;" he muttered. "Oh, have I seen her at last?"

He was worm led slightly in several places, barcheaded, with torn gaments and pale face, but there was some hing in his neld countenance which struck her forcibly.

"What is your name, sir ?"

"Louis Chastellar," he replied. "I am followed by the hearts of Lefebre, and have only escaped with my life, by the ail of a sincere friend. But, perhaps Lefebre is your friend?"

"He is not; he is my enemy."

- "I am glad of that. It would grieve me to know that one who can be so hind to the unfortunate should have such a frient. What am I to do? They will miss me, and return, I fear."
- "I will go to my father, and tell him what has happened. It a first, why dol you say 'Cet bei' when you saw me first? Do you know my face?"
 - "Yes; it is the face of an angel."
 - " Monsieur l'
- "It gith it you will pardon me. One can not always contrible to his the glass. But, you have saved me from a terrible five—saved me for work which must be done—a work of just region in. Go to your father and ask him to come to me, and let him come alone."

Sin lit tim room, and shortly after Lavalle came in and ithe hand of the fugitive warmly.

Yes have nothing more to fear, captain," he said. "Here ye will be safe until we can find means to send you out of the city, into which you should never have come."

"You kin when then, Monsieur Lavalle?"

"I do; and I know you to be a deeply wronged man, but on who can not at present prove his innocence. Let me into your wounds, for you know I semetimes dabble in the ry."

The cuts which Chastellar had received were all upon the the sight of an experienced practitioner.

That is well. None of these hurts are dangerous, but you had better be quiet for a while. I heard something of this affair half an hour ago. How did you chape?"

"You know that Erne Celestin came to warn me?"

"Yes. He is a gallant young man, and does not easily forget old friendship."

"After he left me I ran down the staircase and was encountered by two soldiers. You may be sure I easily disposed of them, but one of them hurt me in the shoulder before he went down. I ran through an alley, and unfortunately stumbled upon a party of four, coming up. There was no time to retreat, so I went at them, and managed to break through, but not until I got these other hurts you have seen. In the meantime the alarm had been given; they guarded all the avenues of escape and I found myself in a net. By good fortune I saw your daughter at a window, appealed to her for aid, and she gave it."

"You might be sure of that, captain, if you knew her as well as I do. Hark! they are gathering again, and barking back upon the trail like hounds who have lost the scent. I must send you away, for they may attempt to search the house."

He went to the door and called Coralie. "Show Captain Chastellar the room next to yours, my dear. I do not like to trust any of the servants, for they might babble. When you have done this, come to the library."

They harried out, and he took his seat at the table and affected to write. Five minutes after came a thundering rap at the door, and he rose, threw open the blind, and looked out. A party of soldiers were grouped about the portico, holding torches in their hands. Poremost among them stood Lefebre and the duelist who had been worsted in the encounter with Chastellar.

"Come this way, gentlemen, if you have any thing to say to me. My servants have retired long ago."

Lefebre left the steps and come to the window.

"We are in pursuit of a ruffian called Chastellar, who is documed to death for a crime committed three years ago. He was last seen entering this street, and we fear he is lying cencealed in some house."

"What should I know of your criminals, Colonel Lefebre, and why do you single out my house?"

"No matter; we wish to enter and search the house,"

"By what right do you make such a demand?" said the chi man, turning to whisper to Coralie, who had just entered the rain, at 1 left it at do obey that low order.

"B, my night as commundant of this post, sir, I commund yes to come year door and a limit me."

"You rector shall be obeyed, Monsieur le Colonel," said Lard's "Any in alt you may put upon me must be a tup with, I suppose. Wait, and I will arouse my servants as I will them to see that nothing is stoked while you are in the house."

" Do you mean to in alt me, sir?" said the colonel.

Lavalle made no reply, but moved at a leisurely pace and opened the doors of the house.

"You and Captain Le Sabreur will be sufficient to search the horse unless you are afraid of this concealed man," said Levalle, securingly. "Post your men at the doors and windows, for he may manage to escape."

They was had everywhere fruitle by, until every nook and cranky in the has not and first floor had been gone over. They then proved up the staircase and searched the bedrooms up a the upper that until they had entered all except that of Coralic.

"This is my drughter's room," said Lavalle. "Of course it is not a fer me to ask you to spare it on that account.

Coralie?"

Whit a moment, monsieur," said Lefebre. "If you will it in your word of henor that the furitive is not in the house I will give up the search."

"I shall not do it. You should have asked me that before year last account house from collar to garret. Oh, here is my daughter."

glance of her bright eyes.

"Want do you will be te, Charel Lefebre? This lat in-the ball in the make me depic you mere."

They was to back your room, Ceralie. Colonel Lefet: Lasso libbs could be in you that he imagines you have a last non-crete latters. Let them enter, if you please."

"C'ridaly. Colonel Lefebre, until this hour I have given you credit which you did not deserve. I know that you were a bad man at heart, but I thought you possessed the outward marks of a gentleman. I do not think so now. The reem is open and you may enter if you choose."

"Comble," said Lefebre, wildly, "you know that I would not willingly insult you. Give me your assurance that you have not seen the man called Louis Chastellar and I will not enter your room."

"Make your own scarches, sir. I do not propose to answer your insults."

"Captain Le Sabreur, you will enter that room and search

"Excuse me, colonel. I am not a man to stick at trifles, but, upon my word you ask too much from even such a nan as I am. You must make this search your elf, or send for some of the men. I will not so degrade myself as to do it, much as I hate the man whom we now pursue."

Lefebre answered by a hoarse exclamation of rage, and, pushing past him, looked into the room. There was nothing which could have hidden a man, and the colonel withdrew, after a cursory glance.

"I beg your pardon, Mademoiselle Coralie, for what I have been forced to do. If you will give it a moment's thought, you will see that my duty was plain, and that I could do no less. Bon soir!"

He went down hastily, followed by Captain Le Salverr, while Coralie and her father followed to the head of the stairway and looked after them, until they heard them witheraw the soldiers and march away. Coralie ran down and looked the doors, pashed the light bedstead aside and touched upon a part of the pencling behind the bed. A slight clicking some was heard, a trap fell down, and Louis Chast that stepp tent.

"We leave managed to get rid of them," said Lavall, "thanks to Caralie's tonque, which to ched the one sense which this man has—his sense of politoness. I am glad that he did not necke a very close search, for I am far from certain he would not have discovered the door."

" For what was this constructed?"

"A hiding-place for plate and other valuables, in case of war," replied Lavalle. "Come into your room again."

"I have much to thank you for, sir, and also your noble degler," said Chasellar. "I am poor and helpless enough now, but the time may come when even such as I may be of use to you. Oh, that I could get safely out of the city! I have work to do, and I must see the Recluse of Mont Royale."

"Why do you wish to see him?"

"I at I can not tell you at present, but see him I must, at any hazard."

- "Yer will not be able to get out of the city," said the other, travity. "Lefter will a watch upon every outlet, until he is fully a dished that you have empel. I think you must keep quiet for a few days."
- "It can not be done. Is there no one by whom you can send a message to-morrow?"

" To what place?"

" To Mont Royale."

At the mount Coralle entered the room.

- "I will go my liftly on really with it, captain," said Lavall. "But I am seaswhat suspected myself, and I fear that the result may be but. But, as I have no other messengra-"
 - " You have one," said Coralie.
 - "Whom can we trust, my daughter?"
 - " (m y a think of no one?" she said with sparkling eyes.
- · "I dare not trust Pierre."
 - "Certainly not."
 - " Or Jasper?"
 - " As bad as the other."
 - "Then, I can think of no one when we dire to sand."
 - . [.
- "li'er termine "I will take the mesize to Mont Right and get at to the Redien. No one will stop me"

CHAPTER IX.

A DARK DEED.

NEVILLE had made his way out of the city, as we have sail, taking the direction to the west, and did not pause until he reached the slope in the rear of Mont Royale, and buried himself in the forest. Here he stopped and sat down to think. He had no hesitation in promising to take the life of the Rechise, nor did he falter now, but the experience of the past night had taught him that he had no common duty to perform, and no ordinary man to deal with. To lie in wait, to creep and hide until he saw his victim and then strike him down, was the course he had marked out for himself. If he had a conscience it was so seared by a life of crime and dissipation that nothing could awaken it.

"They say that he is an old man," he muttered. "Surely he can not give me much trouble, and I care nothing for leger-lemain and clip trap. And then, two thousand Louis! Ha; it is a long time since I had the chance to make two thousand Louis! What is a human life to that, to a man like me, who believes that death is annihilation?"

He looked furtively about him, for he thought he heard a footstep stir the forest leaves. He direct behind a tree and waited, and saw the man who appeared in the first chapter of this work walking rapidly up the slope.

"Not the man I wish to see," mattered the answin, "bat, perhaps he can give me some information. I think I will risk it."

Stepping back out of sight, he made a circuit through the bushes and came out in front of the comer, meeting him fare to face.

"A fair day to you, monsiour,"—ed he, quietly. "Are you bound to Montreal?"

"Suppose that I am; what then?" said the stranger, looking at him five lly, with a saiden look of recognition in his face. "Can I do any thing for you there?" "No; it was marely a passing question. There is a man who lives somewhare in this forest whom I very much wish to some it I to aght if you were not a stranger here you might be able to tell me."

"I can har ly call myself a stranger here, sir," said the other. "What is the man whom you seek called."

"The Recluse of Mont Royale."

- "I know as mething of him," replied the other—" more, pulling than most men can claim to know. Do you wish to see him?"
 - " Yes."
- "I'm mand lire to see him for a second time, especially if they are enemies of his."
 - " I am not his enemy; why do you say so?"
- "I know nothing about that. If you wish to see him, you must come at cleven to morrow to the great bowlder who extends on settle ough the tree teps. I shall see him to-night and tell him your wish. And now good day, or rather evening, for night is coming on."

He str is away, and his form was lost among the trees.

Name is leaded designifically after him.

"I am araid I have done wrong," he said. "Suppose the two cane in company, I shall have my hands full. But, at least I can watch the old man and see where he goes, if he does not come alone. Let me once earth my fox, and trust me for the rest."

Saying this he again sought the depth of the woods, and, sar play tog the r a heap of heaves and moss, he lay down and slipt as I had he had never dreamed of guilt or the shedding of blood.

At an early hear next day Caralie Lavalle was climbing the slie of Ment Ready, toward the spot where she had been sent to ment to Relies. Her beautiful feet was flashed with excitent Ment levered, for hers was a soult to take delight in alvertire. So held in her with the horses at the fact of mention, which held in her with the horses at the fact of mention, which she went on alone. After a difficult with she read of the summit, and proved for breath before she provided in the earth, she approached a leady with a Ly half buried in the earth, and, taking away a few loose stones, which lay near the base, she produced a conch-shell, upon which she sounded, three times, in a peculiar manner, and then sat down to wait. Ten minutes after, without any warning of his approach, the Rechast stood beside her, looking at her mildly.

"You here?" he said. "Who taught you the signal which calls me from my resting-place?"

"Captain Louis Chastellar," replied Coralie. "I will tell you how it happened."

And she recounted the events of the past night and the danger which Louis had escaped.

"And you saved him?" he said, his voice losing the har he tone which characterized it, and becoming soft and sweet as a woman's. "You were a friend to that true-hearted young man, one of the few friends who remain for me? Child, the outcast and the homeless man thanks you from the depths of a long tried and sorrowing heart. May your life he very happy, and those who come after you bless you for your noble deeds."

"I do not descrive it, sir," she said softly, "but, I am glid to have earned your good opinion."

"Why were you sent to me?" he asked.

"To bring you a message," was the reply; "Louis Chastellar sends it."

She took a paper from her bosom and gave it to him. He read it carefully twice, and then tore it into fragments and scattered them to the winds.

"You have only to say to Louis that it shall be done; he may depend upon me. He will understand what I mean when I say "Rue Notre Dame; twelve o'clock—to high." Can you remember the message?"

" Yes."

you in the company of that specious villain, Colored Lendus I have warned you as dost him before, and I repeat my warring now. As it him as you wealth a petilence. There is no villainy so a rest no deed so exil, that he wealth at he guilty of it. His heart is a mine of had the gait, that it as he may under the chak of a han home face and smeath exterior."

"Colonel Leichre and I are no longer friends," she said; on the contrary, we are now open comies. Let me warn you as dust him, for his rage against you is some thing terrible. He would do may thing to destroy you."

"I have no fear of him, my child. It is not written in the book of fixe that he is to conquer. No, I will fight the battle to the end and win at last, in pite of his machinations. One thing note; I know the mission you have set out to perform and in the end you shall succeed. I say to you—hope. In darkest hour is just before the dawn of day. What is that?"

They listened intently but only heard the sighing of the wind among the trees.

"I could almost have sworn I heard a step. Abah!"

The Moor, who had been standing unobserved behind a lovider, showed himself for a moment, and it required a great of it is part of Coralie to keep down a cry of fear.

"My world Abah is not han bome to bok at, but he is true as stell," will the Rechee. "Reco good watch, Abah, for I thought I heard a sound just now."

The Mar disappeared immediately, and nothing more was hard. The Reclass took from his besom a packet of small sir, which he placed in Coralic's bend.

As a fiver to me yet must ask no questions, but keep the pain it and read the writing upon the inside of the paper who is great home. In the hour of your greatest trial, when a third else can save you, come or send to me here, and its the shand, and if I live you shall have help. Fare-it also is a first my me are to Louis: Rue Notice Dame; twelve o'clock—to-night."

House I like head, and sho took it and proceed it reversely to her high. The next mement he was tone, and hide in the pellet in her borns, she heren the descent of the next of the Hiller was inferred and boled back. The higher was in fill view, and, as he turned, she saw the Reduse standing above beneath the great head her hooking at her. The silent majesty of his figure, as he stood resting upon his staff, was not without its effect upon her, and as she gized she saw semething which filled her with horror. A man had crept to the top of the bowller, directly above the head of the Recluse, and she saw him stoop and raise a great stone above his head, as if about to launch it at the immovable figure of the old man. At that distance it was impossible for her to make her voice reach the Recluse, but, she cried out and waved her hand, but he made no sign to in licate that he noticed the getting. Just then the stone came crashing down upon the head of the Recluse, and the figure stagered, and fell to the depths of the ravine through the tree top, a hundred feet below.

The terrible travely was scarcely enacted, when another as fearful took place. Cordie saw the dark form of Alch spring upon the rock and slize Neville, for it was that vill in who had done the deed—in the grasp of his strong arms. A terrible struggle now took place—one which she remembered to her dying day. The two, unable to retain their footing upon the bowlder, slipped down to the platform below, locked in a death-grapple. Although not so strong as his antagenist, Neville was an iron-limbed man, and was fighting for his life.

Twice he attempted to draw a knife, but, it was under the mulcular arm of Abah, and he could not draw it from its sheath. His ribs seemed to crack beneath the torrible pressure of those michty arm, but he fought on flercely, dequiringly, keeping off his fate as long as he could. The man, though a villain, was a brave one, and he had determined to self his life dearly. Twice they stundled upon the dizzy verge, and as often Neville drawed himself away from it, forcing his adversary backward, in spite of his giant strength. At last, Abah tere his feet from the earth and deshed him with a trible violence upon the rocky platform, depriving him of a machine in a glittering knife in his hand.

"Would be kill him?" Coralie cover, I her face with her lands, and shut out the horrible sight. She know that the vill in deserved any death, but, semething teld her that he was only an instrument in the han is of another for the commission of this crime. She looked again, and saw that Alah had replaced the knife in his belt and was engaged in his length ing the fallen man hand and foot. When this was deare he raised the same less body easily, and seemed about to cast it into the ravine, but he did not. Throwing the body across his shoulder like a sack, he stepped lightly up the rocks, and disappeared.

He was cone but a few moments, when Ceralie saw him alin, making his way down the rocks toward her. There was a taken to be harm I from his face, which was set like making that her fear for the Recluse conquered her dread of his mixed, and she run to me thim.

"Why do you not go to find your master? Oh, it was a half a wikelded. Can you not speak?"

· He shook his head slowly.

"You claim to love your master," she cried, angrily; "will you be him lie there, a proy to the wolves? Go, I say, and the lim, for he may be living yet."

Al th silently pointed toward the distant city. "Do you mean that I must go?" she said.

He me it del wly, and still pointed.

what has happened?"

Again he shook his head.

"Your master can not come to him."

At it, pointed to his own breast and taking her by the globler, with an anary potture, as in indicated, by that same not not that she must not and at once. The expression of the lark for was so forbidding that she did not date to stay, his harrist away as fort as she could. Looking back, she saw that A' that salre sly making his way toward the ravine, to making a large state of the fee. What could this harrist a large state of savere love for him?

So for blue over with the horsen half role away at lot of the long relationship. As she approached her it follows a so to be that a trees proceed we passed the form of the horsen half a highest Capt in the long which we have a long which we have a sole possible possible approach the holl, the dome of the him approach, and Colon black the came out, for well is three soldiers having Chartellar in cast say.

"Yen a that we were not mittaken after all," said Leftbre, with an ironical composure. "You will know what it is to attempt to measure swords with me."

"You see this man," said the prisoner, "this man, who claimed to be my triend, and who now gives me up to death. Do not waste sympathy upon me, mademoiselle. I feel that Heaven is too good to let me suffer for the crime of another."

" Silence," cried Lefebre.

"This good man, this gallant soldier was overwhelmed with grief became I had been so wicked," said Chastellar, but, he fools it his duty—his duty, look you—to give me up to justice."

A word with you, Colonel Lefebre, before you take this genthman to prison," sail Coralie. "Will you step into this room?"

"See to him, guards," said the colonel. "If he attempts to chape, do your duty and keep him, dead or alive. Now, mademoiselle, I am at your service."

He followed her into an empty room and closed the door

" I wish you to set this brave young man free," she said.

" I can not do it," he said, sullenly.

"You mult; it is for your interest to do so."

"I can not make it appear so," replied the colonel.

"Then take him if you will, but as I live you will be under arrest in three days time upon a charge of sending a man to marker the old man known as the Recluse of Mont Royale."

He termed glacitly pale, and looked at her with trendling lips.

"It is fide; how dure you seems me of such a crime?"

"It is true as heaven, and you know it. I not leave more. Is there any open accusation are dost Louis Chastellar? Does my one know him except your lift?"

"Only one."

" And who is that?"

" Le Sabreur.

"Operat pure creatures, whom you can easily silence. I will say no more new, but here it to you whether you will dure to stand against the accuration which I can bring against you."

"What witnesses have you?"

"Yers'...!! hnow that, if you dare to stand the trial, but I warn you."

If we is a man ment in sile, a nervously tapping the Literals sword, and boking upon the ground. The bold a restrict had taken him completely by surprise. How mach or a little sign knew he could not tell, nor would she confess it.

"Do you tail me that this old wretch is dead?" he said at Y is villable as accomplice performed the deed but too will, showed it. "But, he is in a condition to witness against yet, as I will do it to save his life. Be careful what you do, "I is I; I cannot speaking at rand an."

"I was the that this gray hair d villain is dead," said Lefor; "Eat, year are in mer wrong fully. I can not guilty of this crime."

the witnesses whom I shall bring."

"Haran Law on for it, if I be the prison po?"

"Year terthe brains consurely conceive a way. You find yours If mirelen in the man, or something of that kind. Choose your own way."

" Will you wait here until I speak with Le Sabreur?"

" " Certainly."

He is the room and called his bally apart and conversed to a local low ton a for some moments. Let Schreut applied the local local local hand has complete were quelled, and the part of the local local local hand had have been so corrupt as to bribe one of the captains of France.

"The national and the new writer lateral and other work is done."

prisoner.

the result of the first the Three Libert

GLOT.

"Any of the officers can tell you that the man with whom I for that had a hand ome suber-cut across his face which this gentleman has not."

"Young sir, I be given pardon for disturbing you, and you are at liberty. I would ask to be better acquainted with you if I did not think that, in the present disturbed state of Montreal, strangers will not be at each in it. You had better leave the city as soon as possible. Captain, withdraw your men, and take them to the barracks."

Corolle stool in the doorway looking on while this comely was enacted. Chastellar was surprised at the turn affairs had taken but was not inclined to quarrel with his good lack.

"I am doubtless indebted to the lady for this," he sail, turning to Lefebre, " for I know that you never released of your own free will."

"You may be certain of that, traiter and spy. I give yet two days in which to get safely out of Montreal, and at the on lof that time if you are found, you die."

And turning on his heel, with a look of it allsh here up at his face, he left the horse, and Ceralie gave both heals to the min she had saved, while his handsome face lighted up with a look before which she cut down her eye, while a carnation tint dyed her cheeks.

CHAPTER X.

IN A TRAP. '

In was after eleven that night when Clastellar, of a larger than we of a larger chark and wile-brime, a larger than a larger and the restricted and model is way the many the patie's whom he model he gives the way of the might, which he had necessed from harden as a pillway larger, the later a single fety. After whalf he as a pillway he regulate a celebral part of the street of Notice Dane and stopped before a small house which lay wrapped in complete darkness. Looking cautiously about him, in order to satisfy him, if that he was not wareled, he approached the door and tage its fly in a peculiar manner. The door was at once appeared that him, and closed not be sly. He found hims if in a small task half. The sound of bolts shooting into their sakes followed, and then a hard cheped his and led him forward. Another door was opened and a voice said:

A SPY. 71

" Stand quiet until I get a light, Louis. We must be careful."

A heap was quickly lighted, and showed a small, plainly formism i room, the only window of which was guarded by a short work a shorter. The man who held the lamp was the same who had directed Neville where to find the Richae, the night before.

I we sirall you would not come, Louis," he sail. "I do in you have been in trouble since I saw you has?"

"il twe been," sail Louis. "That for I villain, Le Sabreur, recount line, and set his hounds upon me, and I escaped by the tall Condit Lavalle. "Ah, she is not changed even if you and I are."

"The and a ble girl as ever. Dil she suspect you?"

"Not at all. I have been strangly tempted to tell her, but, for your sale, I dill not do it. It was hard to hell her hand in ming to be he hard a sweet face, and keep silent; very, 'very hard."

The fine is very nour now," said the stranger. "Montecha will be in the circ in two days, and the proofs are alrealy in his hands. Dur't not that he will do us justice, for, to the ust russelling he knows how to be just."

make Le Sabreur deny that he knew me."

"Trucks of all the other, quietly, "She has accomplished. What is it, Abah?"

The Morphish is his to the window-Mind, and the structure of the late of the windows to be in the design of the late of the la

"A thousand curses light upon his spying heal, Louis: He has tracked you to the house, and we are in danger. Away, both of you to the place you know, for it will not be long before he will return."

He opened a narrow door at the end of the room and hurried them through, following them quickly, and taking the lamp with him. Ten minutes had hardly passed, when a party of soldiers surrounded the house, and both Le Sabreur and the colonel were with them. Their rap at the door was unanswered, and, after some delay, it was broken in and the guard poured into the little hall.

"You are sure you have marked the house, captain?" said Infebre. "There hovels look so much alike that you might easily be mistaken."

"There is no mitake, colonel; I carthed the fellow here."

"Where is Neville?"

"Here," said that worthy, coming forward. He walked feebly, and seemed to be in paid, and, is leed, he had not yet recovered from his encounter with Abah.

"Would you know this man who told you where to meet the Recluse if you saw him again?"

" Yes."

"Describe the person you saw, Le Sabreur.

The captain did so, and a sort of shulder pased through the frame of the colonel.

" Is that the man?" he said.

"The very same!"

"If the deal could rise from their graves I might say I knew him too," murmured the colonel. "Have you I has I that touch yet, Darmay? You tremble as if you far I to meet the sprite who calls him all the R close of Mont Road."

"He has good rowen to fear it," said the one vole which they knew so well, and which had terrified Neville and Lofebre on the right when they plotted the death of the line. "The doctor content of their graves to embound on which lains. Murderers, beware!"

The half light I torch dropped from the wrond in half, and was exting asked upon the floor. An uncertain in drawn a strape, vibration, hollow seared filled the hour, and the stoutest held their breath.

"Demons or spirits, whatever you may be, come out and face no. I diffy you and all your arts," shricked Lefebre.

"Drey at defy as?" cried the same voice. "The earth die in your sins."

"Give not a torch," cried Lefebre. "Forward all, and the flist one who falters I will cleave to the chin. Search the losse, and let nothing escape you. Le Sabreur, remember that neither of these men is to be taken alive."

One of the non at the door brought a torch and Lefebre led the way, a naked sword in his right hand. They dashed into the little reem which the three men had left so shortly before, but, no one was in sight. The sounds had coased and the spir t of the leader began to encourage the rest. Only Neville was trembling like an aspen.

"Fool!" hissel Lefebre in his ear. "I tell you that these name we sook saw you do the deed. You are doomed if they escape."

"That old man's face will never leave me," whispered Neville. "I see it every moment, and hear his hollow voice. It was he who spoke just now."

"Op a that door, Darnay," cried Lefebre, "and see where it leads to."

Time remark threw open the shall door, before mentioned and looked down.

"It was to be a celler way," he said, looking back.

"We have trapped them, then," said Lefebre. "Come for vard with your hayenets and support us. Draw your swill. N ville, and use it as you know how. There men will fight for their lives."

The whole party crowled into the cellar-way, Neville, Lefile and the captain in alvance, while the soldiers followed with level debyers. They were all upon the frail stairway when it such a ly give way and the party fell in a confile he do to the lettern of the cellar. In the confusion the Mark wall cat, a derive of pair, caths, and growns filled the plane. Of catherso many per case hed in a weapons in their leads such dropping to gother, could not fell without furting and contact their terror, imagining them elves attacked, many blows were strack before Lefebre condequet them, "This is capital," he said. "Now, who is hurt?"

A chorus of voices answerel, among which was hard that of Le Salreur declaring that his ler was broken and bewalling the hour that led him to interfere in the affairs of other men.

"Keep silent, you blockhead," said the colonel, almost beside himself with rage. "Pick up your torch and see if you can light it, sergeant."

It was useless, for the last spark went out as the sergeant lifted it.

"Jump up there, and get a light from the first patrol you can find," said Lefebre.

The serge ant groped about in the thick darkness until his hands touched the sill of the door above, and, as he grasped it to swing himself up, something fell upon his fineers with such force as to draw a howl of pain from him, followed by a volley of French blasplacmy not necessary to put down here. The sound of a closing door followed, and bolts shot into their sockets.

"We are trapped," cried the colonel. "By all the devils in hell, those who have done this shall dearly me it. Open the door there; let us out of this, or sail'r the consequences"

A modified handle was the only reply, and the sound of hammer and nails succeeded.

"They are nailing up the door, och nel," foured Le Schreit.
"Shoot, all together and perhaps the patrol may hear us."

They shouted in vain, for the walls and floors were double, and no sound could penetrate them.

"What shall we do?" said Leftbre, in a tone of blank dis-

"There is nothing for us but to take our imprisonment as coolly as we can, and wait for mornar," replied the sergeant.

cape."

"Darbles; we are define with the very Challer persens, non colonel. I doubt they will preve tee had be rus in the end. Year should have by a grand at the docr."

"We should have been all right if the accuract staircase had not broken down," replied the colonal, as villy. "So such alout, and see if you can find nothing to batter in the door."

The whole party set to work, groping about upon the floor of the caller, but their sauch was in vain. The men who had trapped them knew their business too well to saucr themselves to be caught easily.

"This is the work of the devil," his ed the colonel. "Is the to those who have done it, when I once get out of this trap."

"Man of blood," cried the voice which they had heard beices, "out of the earth in which your victims lie they cry a out for vengeance. Where is Louise Vernay, where is her has cold, the man whem you betrayed?"

"I did not kill them," shricked the unhappy man. "It is false; she destroyed herself."

"Destroyed here if? Yes! she preferred the refuge of the grave to dishoner. But, who forced her to seek that refuge, if not Lefebre?"

"It is faise! Man or spirit, whoever you may be, I defy y u! I love! Louise Vernay before he ever saw her; she was to have been my wife, but & came between us."

"Her! She chose for herself and distinguished him by the lift of her love. From that hour you worked in secret, until you drove him to his death. Then, when you had robbed her of all she held dear, you followed her still, until she give up the struggle and died. Where is the Recluse of Mont Royale, your last victim?"

" I-I know nothing of him."

"Ask the trembling coward by your side if that is true, Willer Neville, stand forth and answer: Did you kill the c'I man upon the slope of Mont Royale?"

"N . no!" seremed the gellty wretch. "It was not my

f. if He felt into the car in by accident."

"I belyer hand haid him low and you were hired to do the lead by that supreme villain by your side. Behold your victim?",

A sert of derepered above them, and there, stading in a liter of light, was the fewer of the Reel scot Mont Royale, but the plant of the staff! A ghostly poleness was upon his face and has find all was clotted with gore. One hand was out.

stretched, pointing at the shrinking figure of Neville, while the other grasped the staff. Then the vision faded, and Neville was down upon his face upon the cold earth, senseless as the clay on which he rested.

CHAPTER XI.

WHO WAS GEHARDO?

Convert had opened the packet given her by the Recluse and found that it contained a miniature, which she looked at long and intently. A beautiful face, the face of a woman in the bloom of her youth and beauty, bearing a wonderful resemblance to Coralie.

The face came back to her, as she had seen it long aro, and she did not need to read the paper which was wrapped about the picture to tell her that this was the face of her mother!

She kis ed the miniature and took up the paper which had enfolded it. If her mother was dead, after all? If this speaking face would never look at her again? The first words she read confirmed her fears:

Your mother, an angel on earth is an angel in heav a now. Bow down to her as to a sciat, for she subject lunich. I who tell you this have much to do before I can tell you all. I only say, wait, and hope.

The Receiver.

She bowed her head upon the table and burst into tears. Half her mission was accomplished, for she had so ight her mother and found only a grave, long green.

Louis had a ked her not to retire before his return. He came lack about two o'check, and entered the house by her his of a passkey and came at once to the library.

"I have only a moment to pass with you," he sill; "I at I could not so away up, if I had soon you arrive he follow is upon my track; I have more red to escape by the eil of two constant friends. If I can be palear of him for two days all will be well, but I date not stay here."

"It is better that you should go," she said, softly; "and, though we part from you sadly, it must be borne. Why is it that I som to know you so well, and why is your face as that of one I knew long ago?"

He averted his face for a moment.

You have a good ras in for it," he said. "I can not tell you now, because my name and fame must be cleared in the cycs of all men as well as in yours, before I declare myself. But, that does not alter the fact that I love you, and my one hope is to nake myself worthy of you."

Her heal was bent low, but he took her hand in his, and, raising her heal by gentle force, looke I into her eyes. They gave him a great Lepe, and he stooped and kissed her.

"Trist in me, my dirling," he said. "Have no fear of I. filte or his villains for eyes are watching ham of whom yet don't dram. Threwell, but you shall see me as in soon."

He with present his lips to hers and was gone, and she retired to her room.

Next by size ordered her horse and rode out, and, as she produced the southern barrier of the city, she met a party of some coming in, who had a prisoner among them—the Indian, Goher lo—with his hards bound behand him, and a gash up a his forched from the cut of a sword. She knew the some in command, Durnay, and asked him whom they had taken.

"A spy, not be the barrier on his way out of the city."

"How do you know him to be a spy?"

Behold him!'

The many part I the called upon the arm of the prioner and rived has kin as white as a woman's. At this moment the prion rimined his had and looked intently at Cording ship 'ed in her saidle, for the eyes which looked at her were those of Louis Chastellar i

"He will you take him, sergeant?" she controlled here if sufficiently to ask.

"Way, Malan Lander was rilling past the barrier, and her horse took fright at a chance pistol shot and tried to run. This spy was passing, and ran to help her, and stopped the hore, but, in doing it, he tore the calico on his shealler and I saw his white skin. I had to take him, of course, though I hated to do it, under the circum tances."

"It is too bed to capture a man who would have emped but for such a docd as that! You had better let him exapt, sergeant."

"I wish I dired, mademoiselle, but I should be shot before the whole garrison if I did. No, he must take his charges. Confound him, he knocked over two of my best men before he was taken, and if he had a weapon, I don't believe we should have taken him. Bon jour, mademoiselle; I must go on, or one of the officers may see us, and you would not like to get a poor fellow into trouble."

They murched on toward the burracks, and Coralic, after riding a short distance, turned back after them, sick at heart. Louis taken, after all he had undergone captured on the eve of his triumph! She bluned him for disguising himself, and being taken inside a garrisoned post in that garb. She knew that Lefebre, had he been ever so much inclined to do so, dured not set him at liberty without a trial, and the days of grace he had given were over.

A few pieces further on she was met by a soldier, who halted and addressed her.

"I am or lered by Colonel Lefebre to see your sifely to your house," he said.

"I do not need your escort, and so you may tell the colonel," she answered.

The same and le no reply, but fell into the rear, keeping ber in sight until she reached the house, and she was not same it to find Lefebre there.

"I am forced to bring you unwelcome intelligence, make noiselle. A deep hill scheme is on foot in the interest of the English to betray Montreal, and your father and yours if are implicated. You must consider yours if under an exact and retire to your room. A grand will be placed at your door, but otherwise you will be put to no interesting."

She looked at him scornfully for she saw in this only another plot to annoy her.

"Are you aware that the gentlemen whom you arrested in this house has a min been taken, and is now on his way to prison, sir?"

"I am alad to hear it. Having foolishly set him free once, it is har liv to be expected that I should do so a second time."

"Yet I demand his liberty."

"And your demand is refused. Your absurd charge against the is without four lation, and if Louis Chastedar is taken, he dies before two days are passed."

" Yer dare not marder bian, for your life."

"All: we will see. I do not intend to bandy words with a pris mer, and you may as well refire."

"What charges do you bring against me?"

"That shall be explained, in day season. Will you retire to your room, or must I call a guard."

yen, it you shall find that I have not threatened in vain."

S.s west to her room, and a guard was posted at the door.
"See so; she is safe," muttered Lefebre. "Neville ment now do his part."

Will r Neville had not yet quite recovered from the terrilloff plat of the night before, and appeared before the colon, I plat and horgard. The planty had remained coeped up in the eller of the hore into which they had forced themselves, will as raing gove them light sufficient to break their which had the hid is they did with indicate difficulty. On course they found the hid is them, but Infelire sont special course they found the hid is the way, but Infelire sont approach course is processed in the hid in the process that way. In this manner hours had not infelire to the horizonts of his enemies.

"Why do y a come to me with such a free as that, No-VIII is all the colonel, bution by: "Must I find wit and courage for all my men."

might unnerve any man." Such a sight as that I must find ano her agent." .

keep lesy or that horrible vision will not keep out of my head. What must I do now?"

Lefebre whi-pered in his ear, and the man nodded slowly. "It shall be done, sir," he said. "Any thing to hill time."

In an hour Louis Chastellar was in the strong room of the Citadel prison, heavily ironed and with little hope of escape. He knew his captor well enough to be certain that little time would clapse from the time of his science to his execution. Lefebre had hated him before—he feared him now, as one of the probable witnesses against him in case his share of the guilt in the murder of the Recluse was brought to the proof. Coralic had seen him, however, and knew his peril. She had saved him before—would she be able to do it now?

That question was soon answered, for the heavy door swung open, and Lefebre was admitted, alone. At a signal the only outlet was closed and locked behind him, and he stood hooking with a fierce glance at the unfortunate young primer, who returned his look by one of houghty defiance.

"This is your work, Lefebre," he said. "I might have known you would not keep your word to me."

"Bah, you are a fool, Louis. You always were a fool, you know, even when I claimed to be your friend, or you would not have believed that I could be friendly to a min who, younger than I, was rapidly outstripping me in my own branch of the service. You have run your head into the lim's jaws; let us see you get it out."

"The jaws of a wolf, if you will, not a lion. Many an ass has tried to wear the lion's hide and failed, Lefebre. The ears will show themselves."

"You know what to expect, it seems," said L.f. ie.
"You can not hope for mercy, after that insult."

"I do not expect it," was the quiet reply. "Yen may kill me, but, from my ashes shall arise a placing which shall make you tremble! Take friend, false lover, false to every good and true thing, your triumph will be a short one. Yen do not dream what a thunderbolt is langing over your look!"

"I care not," replied Lefebre. "So that I have my reverce, let what will come. As for you, to morrow you shall die."

"What; without trial?"

"I hold a standing order from the marquis to execute year whenever you may be found. If that were not enable, you were taken as a spy, larking in the city, and I might make you die the death of a spy if I chose. I prefer to have you shot."

Thank you. It is the first favor you have shown me, and I shall at least die a soldier's death, not the death of a dog.

Why do you stay here? I have hel enough of you."

"I know what you have haped to do, Louis Chastellar, but your hope is in vain. You depend upon the Recluse to crush me after you are gone. He is dead and rotting, and I have nothing to fear from him."

"Dead! When did he die?"

"Yesterday morning."

A structed bot prod over the free of the prisoner.

"Yes, and his spirit appeared to you list no hit. Fear him yet, villain, for his given has more power to herm you than any other being which treads the earth alive. Go?"

"I am going But, let me tell you one thing, Louis. The warm per love, whom you have watched in secret for ten yours, as she grew up from childhood to womenhoed, is in my part, and nothing earthly shall prevent her being my wife."

"Yead reneth mater, black bear blas you are. Heaven will in a suffer so a read a wicke in se as that."

Heaven unifers many things to come to pass which look it in the eyes of men," sheeted the columb. "I lid you thing, and go to call a council of officers to doom you to death."

The dear charact behind him, and Louis was alone in his place, weiting for his down. A few hours passel, and the large well again to a limit a Jourit price, who extended his in her diction over the head of the prison w.

"My son," he said "I have come to announce to you that
- your face is fixed, and to prepare you for the world to come "

"A -111 r should always be prepared for the last claim of any factor," said the years man. "I am ready to die, if it is God's will."

Y and be shot to the the to merow, in sind of the gards up 1 at leine you go, make your perce with God, and contest your sine."

"My sand the many, father, and I will confers them to God in prayer."

"But, the crime for which you die-"

"I never committed. I will not die with a lie in my muth, and I till you here, before Ged, that I am as guiltiess of this sin as you are."

"My son, confision is good for the soul. As your priest I ask you to repent and tell me by what sore my you were led to turn traiter to France and take bribes of her enemies."

"If any except a priest had said what you say now, and my hands were free, I would cram the lie down his threat. As it is, your profession protects you."

"Year heart has been hardened more than I had thought, my son. I have here written a confession, to save time, say-ing that you are guilty. Sign your name to it."

"Due you derrate a noble colling by a king me to do that, priest? Offer me that paper if you dure! No, falso priest, I can die, but at least I will die with honor in my heart. Lefebre has sent you here to tempt me, but he does not knew me. Away, before I forget what you are, and strike you."

"The cure of the church hangs over you if you refuse to sign," cried the priest.

"Let it fall, tien, for I will not do myself this great dis-

The priest started up suddenly and came forward, and the prisoner, stretching out his manacled hands, caught him by the board and gave it a tag. As he had supposed, the board came off, and revealed the visure of Walt r Naville!

"Ha, ha, ha! you a priest, good triend Neville. Ot, before I brain you with my handend!!"

Neville uttered a savage curse, and, catching up his heard, same good and closed the door behind him, paring on the lard as he went. The mocking laughter of the young prisoner followed him.

on one of the lower rooms he found Lefebre waiting.

" Has be signed it ?" he cried, eagerly.

Not he! He has detected me, tore the heard from my .ce and laughed at me."

"Carse him! But, it does not matter. After he is dead, at y may blame me if they will. With him and this accurse I Recitize out of the way, I have nothing to feer."

"Why will you speak of him?" whispered the leaser val-Lin. "I rnow that he is dead; I know that I killed him, but, his face will not leave me."

"Yer eaged by a miracle. What do you suppose the his a would have a new with you if you had not slipped the buckle and escaped?"

"I die ild be a deel man nou," replied Neville, sullenly, "What is to be done with old Lavalle?"

"Lave Lim under guard. You have nothing to do with Lim whatever. Come out into the street."

Trey left the building and walked out into the main thoroughfare of the growing city. Crowds of men were passing to and fro; groups of civilians and soldiers were talkis tal corners, and market-men and half bree's loit red care-I say at the Wherever the two went, one of the helf bree s I if they had looked at him they would have a in something in his eye which boded no good to them.

CHAPTER XII.

CORALIE ENSNARED.

Committee prisoner of Colonel Lefebre.

Sie hit with ther here was in danger, and that the char e azida her was transped up to keep her out of the way, and to the will the a my testimony she might give a dist her on hiv. Her fether was also a prisoner in his room, and the cally known frinchs of Ladis Chartealer were thes disposed of.

Sin tried to enjoy but every movement was watched. It is the windows were granded, and the men at her deer had criers to see that the little is the recom, her communinicate with any one outside.

N. did Cate and formal her will a prisoner Town in lat was Lalf rate when there was an abata in the upper part of the Le . . . and the mart randowater put that the had emped. how, no one knew. Captain Le Sabreur received the report calmly and went up to look at the room. The evidences of a struggle were plainly manife t, the familiare was in disorder, and Coralie was gone.

"You may stay in the house," said the captain, " and I will go down and report to the colonel."

There was a larking smile upon the face of the dealth. It was evident that he knew more of the escape than be cared to say, and that it did not take him by surprise. Leaving the house at once, he went down to see the colonel, with whom he had a short interview and then came back to withdraw all the guards except a screent and one private, left in charge of Lavalle. Their plans had succeeded but too well, and they had nothing to fear from the old man.

Had Coralie indeed escaped?

She had remained quictly in her room until called to the window by a low tapping sound. Pushing the such a ide, the saw the face of a man close to hers.

"If you would occape," he whispered, "I will ail you. The guard has been drugged, and the way is open."

"Who sent you to me?"

"A friend of Louis Chastellar, and your friend as well. He desires your help in setting the prisoner free."

Coralie could think of nothing worse than to remin a prisoner in the hands of Lefebre, and she determined to take the proffered aid. At a word from the man she stepped out upon the balcony, where she found a ladder of ropes, by me as of which he had ascended. In a moment she was upon the pavement, and he was beside her.

"Follow me," he whi-pered. "In ten minutes you will be with your friends."

She followed without a word, and he led her away from the principal starts into a sechiled quarter of the town.

"Where are you taking me?" she said, pasing as if he si'te ting to follow further.

"We are abnost there," he said. "Turn back, if you profer to tract to the tender mercies of Left re"

"Gorn," desail. "Notions can be were than that."

A short dist are further on she stopped a a'n, and declared that she would go no further.

"Doyn wish to destroy the man who trusted in you?" he d man is he "I tell you that it is all right and you have nothing to fear."

While she yet hesit desh, he was joined by another man, who cannot it of an alley-way close at han l. The last man carried some thing a ross his arm which looked like a clock. Being theory, I, it proved to be one of those booded clocks worn by French wearen of the lower class.

"They wait for you," said the last man. "Put this on, lady, and make haste."

She pished him aside and uttered a single scream, but, before size could repeat it, the clock was thrown over her head, mulling in rock s, and she was lifted in strong arms and carried regulty down the aley from which the list man had come. So rely after a door was opened and closed after them, and the man who carried her set her down.

"Help me, Neville," he whispered. "She struggles like the devil."

a trap and no help can come to you."

The clark was the was off and she found herself standing in a narrow, disabeliance hall, held fast by two men, one of whom was Walter Naville. He was harding over the success of his plat, and exalting in her agenty.

waste your strength for naught."

Hail is helf dragged, she was forced to move forward up a mare a stairs, and into a room without win lows, and but a significant. The Chamber was luxuriously furnished throughten.

"The color has prepar has beautiful eage for his fine had been his prepar has beautiful eage for his fine had been had b

"Don't have me." I spel Cordie, within hy the arm.
"In the large of year matter, I charge you not to leave me."
- here alone."

Home of her group, roughly, and spring from the room, for and the clutter of bolts and the said of her was a more hopeless prioner than ever. What would be her fate, and for what purpose had she been brought to this place?

Her doubts were soon changed to certainty. She heard the bolts with lrawa, and, a moment after, Lefebre came in and closed the door behind him. She uttered a cry of horror, and sprung away, placing a table between herself and her enemy.

"Can you give me no better reception than that, my dear girl," he said. "You really ought to be thankful to me for putting you so completely out of danger."

"Why was I brought here, Colonel Lefebre? I deman!

that you return me to my father's instantly."

- "I regret to be obliged to refuse a laly's request," said he, with a sneer, "but that is impossible. Coralie, you have transpled on my love, insulted me, accepted every vile report against me, until you have driven me to despair. I love you still, in spite of all you have done, and would make you my wife with joy, if you will consent."
 - "Coward; you insult me, as I am your prisoner."
 - "Is the offer of my love an insult?" demanded Lefebre.
- "Yes; the deadliest insult you could offer. Let me go free, and you may not have cause to repent it."
- "Have your own way, hard hearted girl. You have spoken the death-sentence of one you love, for, while he lives, there is no hope for me. When the morning comes, and you have the march of troops, and the sound of the mulled dima, you will know that Louis Chastellar is going out to his death."
 - " It will be a foal murder, for he is innocent."
- "Grant that he is, no one can prove it sive myself. I have in my possession proofs of that innocence, and could set him free in an hour. I will do it now, if you will promise to marry me. Having done that I know that you will keep your word."
- "I will not do it. Go and do your work, unnatural man, but you shall not triumph long."
- "In this prison you shall stay until you consent to be my wife. In Montreal I am ab olute, and you shall find it so. Come this way."

He opened a small panel in the wall, which had served to hide a single thick place of glass commanding a view of the extensive plain in the rear of the city.

"When you hear the drum," he said, "look from this window and you will see a sight which will please you, the excition of a criminal. And remember that you are completely in my power, and no other man shall possess you, if I kill you with my own hand."

He timed and left the room, locking the door securely, and Cralle Lay die was alone, waiting for the coming of the marning, which was to bring such great evil upon her and hers. The threats of Lefebre had been spoken calmly and were these of a man who had considered his course and meant to keep his word.

Morning came, bright and beautiful. She pushed aside the partial and book. The house in which she was placed was is lated; all that was in view from the window was the broad plain and beyond the lofty mountain.

At it was tolling in a spire, near at hand—slow, solemn thes, policy through the clear morning air. In the confine I space in which she stood Coralie could only tell by the slight jur that followed each vibration, that the bell rung at all. It was tolling for a death—the death of Louis Chastellar!

An hour passed on, and the head of a marching column I can to pass the house in which the poor girl was confined. Such and the sound of muffled drums, beating a dead murch, and then the first horsen in came in view, leading the column. With measured steps and downcast heads murched the solders of France, reinstabling a brother soldier to his death. Notice among them but recomized the justice of the rule by which a spy meats his door, as a sufeguard for all armies; but they had beard of Louis Chastellar as a gallent soldier, one who had met death in many forms, but had the soul of a place, and k to do noble deals. They could hardly believe him a lity, and yet, the condemnation was out against him, and he must pay the forfeit.

it do not upon the plain, waiting for the moment when he should not be set the saw him, muching between two in sets of sold re, with or et head and haughty bearing, as if he march I to his welling, not to his death. There was a mething in the earl of his proud lip, in the glance of his speaking eye, which sent a thrill through the harts of the spectators. White many of them believed him railty, not one in all that crowd, except his immediate and personal enemies, but would have been glad to see him e cape.

"Must I look on and see him die," graped Cordie, clasping her hands in agony. "It is too terrible: I can not be ar it."

She covered her face with her hand, and fell face down-ward on the sofa. But, the roll of the drum called her az an to her feet, and she saw that the soldiers had formed in a hollow square, the open end facing the morant in. In the center of this open side stood the doomed men with his arms folded on his broad breast, calmly regarding the proparations. Outside the ranks of the soldiery could be an hearly every civilian in Montreal, drawn out by so great and strange an event as this. Inside the square, just in a lyance of the closed end, stood the officers and staff of Colonel Lefeire, who was, for the time being, command and in Montreal.

An officer approached with a hundkerchief and some I about to bind it upon the eyes of Christellar, but he threw it off with a lofty gesture. And now the firing party alverted and took their stations, while the young man bent ais kneed a moment in prayer. Coralie saw him rise quickly, turn to Colonel Lefebre and cry out something in a manner of haughty defiance, and the colonel made on analy genture. As he did so, Coralie saw, gleaning in the sum ays, tackys long muskets leveled at her lover's heart.

CHAPTER XIII.

CONCLUSION.

Lows Chastellar had accepted the fate in store for him bravely, and was ready when the soldiers came to beel him est to death. As he passed under the windows of the isolated stone house, little did he think that the eyes of Coralie were looking down at him, full of agony that they must behold his ing her whore she must see the execution, and the fulfilment of his plan for revenge. As they passed along the crowded streets, among many whose eyes looked compassionately at him. Lods saw the girnt form of Abah, who seemed to take an extraordinary interest in the proceedings. As the cortege has well on, the Moor kept pice with them, watching him intently, but, as they left the town he sublenly disappeared.

Lefebre did not weste time. He refused to allow any dying special upon the part of the prisoner, and gave him only a more at for prayer. When he had prayed Louis rose, and,

I sking five liv at Lafebre, thundered out:

" Now, murderer, do your work."

Lef tre rai I his hand, and in an instant more the soul of Leels Chartter world have thel, but, a great turnult rose, in a man press linto the space before the colonel, holding an open paper in his hand.

" Mented nearly you this," he cried.

The colon I stratched the paper and read thereon three words.

Made day."

"Winsent this?" he cried, fiercely, turning to the mes-

"The marquis."

"It is fall, and the paper you have brought me is a fall, and this man from death. Let the execution go on?"

· B. J. (1 a. 1 -" barm the messenger.

" Sile of man; do you come here to teach me my duty?

Philagrany-to the front. Make ready-"

"Tals will not do, colonel," cried Eine Celestin, spurring his horse in front of his superior. "None of us will stand horse and see you murder a man in opposition to Montcalm's order. Ground arms, men'?"

The end and the firing-party, who was from Erne's combrisky, evidently shelt to do so.

"Trees here, by heaven!" cried Lefebre. "Stand back, Linear." Here Coletin, or you will stand beside this other traitor. Radomen, to the front!"

The men refuse I to move, for the officers in command would not repeat the order. They were glad of any chance which might save the unfortunate man. While they stood in doubt, there came the clutter of hoofs, and a brilliant company of officers dashed up, and at their head rode that firm, iron-willed man who ruled so well the destinies of Canada.

The crowd parted right and left to a lmit him, and a cheer of delight went up from the whole a sembly, who knew that, while he could be stern when occasion required, the creat marquis could also be just. Lefebre turned to the firing-pary and shouted to them to fire.

" Non." crack Montealm. "Attention; recover arms, soldiers."

The butts of the ritles dropped together upon the outh, and a sigh of relief broke from the breast of every sollier.

"Lieuten int Celestin, you will release the prisoner from his bonds and bring him forward."

Montealm dismounted and every officer did the same. As they alighted, an officer in the uniform of a colonel tarned a triumphant look toward Lefebre, and he saw the face of the man whom Neville had met upon the mount—Antrey De Lambert. A cry of horror broke from his lips at the sight.

"You, you!" he cried. "Ah, then, I am doomed!"

"Yes, villain," ori d De Lambert, "the man you have bruted and hounded almost to the grave, turns upon you at the last. The proofs you have so long withheld are in the hards of the marquis, and you can not ecope. The do may you design I for another, you must teste."

"Not yet?" hisel the colonel, and, wheeling his hore, he dished saddenly through the crowd, overturning them right and left, and, before a bund could be baid upon him, he was away on the plain, at full speed.

"Let him go," said Montealm. "It is impossible for him to escape. Guards are placed at every barrier, and he will be taken. Stand forward, Walter Neville. You a year ago a captain of Canadian irregulars, a disgraced man, dooned to death if taken, shall have no mercy. Take charge of him, Lieuten int Maurice, and lead him to prison."

Neville, he willy irone I, and pale as death, was led away by the guard.

"Captain Louis Carstellar," said Montealm, "you had been a loft, do all crime, and the flading of the court was an inst year. It is now my pleasing duty to apologize to you for an uniterational wrong, and to restore to you the commentation of half carned, and allot you to a company in the Tarafia regiment of Rales, now stationed in Montreal."

" But there is no vacancy, your excellency," whispered a major.

You have been accused of conduct unbecoming an officer and a reach man, and many consider yourself under arrest. Captain Chast that will take your company for the present. Remove him, Sergeant Darnay."

Gill to perform the day, the sergeant advanced, followed by two files of his company, and led away the obnoxious captain.

It is wremains for me to explain to you, officers and soldiers, that this brave young man, Captain Chastollar, was the object of a deep hid constitucy on the part of Colonel Lefore and a man now dead. This in corruptible spirit was in the way of their problems, of the public money, and they determine the throw their own guilt upon his shoulders. They seem that to well, for the open and this spicious nature is welly entropyed. It febre intrusted him with some letters to carry to a certain point, and these letters, which were upon his parent when are to have found to be direct between the carries of the plans. It is a with a real the contained information of the plans of our Georgia. These letters he carried an aspectingly, and they proved his downfall.

at Q to, the class are, as an English spy. The dry beformula beautiful as a corn and with a distance in the life, he pland as a corn and with a distance in the life, detailing the member of this great villainy. I need to the life interpretable upon its receipt, I prepared for a class visit to Matrid and a time acress on foot to find on the all reduces of type in Objection. The all the saints
I consider the part of the limit by the hand, a gentleman and officer, free from every stain."

A roar of delight went up from all sides, and Chartellar was the center of an excited group, eazer to take him by the hand. He met them with a happy smile upon his face, and a tear in his eye.

"And now, for more of the work of this arch traiter," sail Montcalm. "I am open in his condemnation, because the court martial has acted upon his case and he is condemnable. You see this gallant officer." laying his hand upon the shoulder of the colonel, at the sight of whose face Lefebre had been so terrified—"you may not recognize him, but, when I tell you that this is the celebrated Aubrey De Lambert you will know him."

Aubrey De Lambert! Many of them remembered him, that years before, as one of the most promising officers in the structure. They hardly recognized him now, worn by private and a sorrow which would never leave him.

"De Lambert was also condemned by a court-martial, but his punishment was simply 'dismissed from the service,' and an interdict from again setting his foot within the realms of Canada. The accusation was plotting to make himself the head of a realm, which he was to found here, and the principal witness was Letebre and this man who died confessing his guilt. The count could not find sufficient evidence to condemn him to death, but they banished him under the penalty of death if he again entered Canada. The proofs of his innocence he sought in a series of letters between Lefebre and his condjutor, which were in Lefebre's possession. He has sought them for long years and found them at last, and I pronounce him free from stain, and worthy to lead the self-less of France to battle."

Cheer upon cheer followed.

"Your excellency," said De Lambert, "I entrent you to let me go There is still work to be done, which only I can do. If you will permit me, I will take Captain Charles with me."

The permission was given, and the two efficers so labely restored to their rank, role as rapidly as they could through the crowl, pasing directly under the windows of the lasse in which Coralic was confined. As they passed they heard a woman's scream, a pistol shot, and the sound of heavy place.

"Her voice," cried Chastellar. "Oh, God, what does it mean?"

The door open I as they rushed in, and, dashing up the stairway, they came to the door of the upper room. Throwing it capen they reshed in, and came suddenly upon a ghastly size. The floor was stained with blood, and in the center, in a phastly heap, by the dead form of Lefebre, his skull cast. I like an exastill. Half-reclining on the floor, at a late distance, by Abah, endeavoring to stanch the blood with a lowed from a wound in his break, and Coralie stood upon, but faint no, looking with diluting eyes at the fearful sight. Regulzing Chasteller, she threw herself into his arms with a glad cry.

"You are not hert," he said, classing her to his heart. "Thank God for that."

"Give her to me," cried De Lambert, eagerly. "My child, her time. After many years I have come back to you. I am your father, Coralie."

S. howel at him in mute astonishment.

" My father I"

"Yes, yes; your mother, driven to her death by yonder of his villain, is in her grave. You have seen her picture, and you have a mething of her face, but you can not know her heart."

In an instant shows in his arms, and he hold her in a fore at class, of a to his beating heart. A sort of gasping side call it their attention, and they saw that Abdu had called heart are and was trying to chasp the knees of De Lambert.

"Oh, heren," he cried, "my faithful servant, have I only come in time to see you die ?"

Herein his his an effect, and pointed exultantly at the said for a life of the analysis over breast. Then it is a life of the said a question.

"I A. A. IA. A. Y: "this is not the life. But let me look at your wound."

if the property of the property of the property has the back, dead!

"Faithful unto death," said De Lambert. "Let us leave this place, my daughter; it is too terrible a sight for you. In good time you shall understand how it was I did not sooner claim you. We will go, and together plan out a new and happier life."

6 Have you ever thought of the boy to whom you premised to be faithful when Lavalle adopted you, Coralie?" whispered

Louis, as they went out together.

"Often; I fear he is dead," said the girl, softly. "Pour fellow, he loved me."

"No, Coralie; he is not dead, but lives and loves you still. Louis Chestellar will not forget what he promised the little maid, so long ago."

"Are you he?" cried the girl, in astoni liment. "Sarpring will never end. But ob, that good old man, the Rechest. He was numbered by that coward, Neville, and will never live to witness our happiness."

A strange smile passed over the face of Chastellar, but he sail nothing. They went to Lavalle's house, and De Lambert placed before the old man the box which he had thrown as it as empty. Touching a spring, a folded paper was revealed which contained these words:

"At the intercession of my captain, who has been kind to me, I consent to accept and rear as my own the child whom he has brought to me. Her true name is Coralie De Lambert, and her parents are deal. Her father was the celebrated Colon 1D. Lambert who was tried for conspiracy and ban-to I from the colony. Her mother died two years ago of a brain is ver, I rought on by her husban is misfortunes. I agree to keep this child's name a secret while I live, for the love of one who has been kind to me.

Jacquas Criticox."

"The picture is her mother's, and was suspended by this small gold chain to the child's neck. I may have done write in concealing her name and lineages of her, and if so, may the saints pardon me.

"And now, to explain some things which have been mass tori sup to this time, Coralie. You have been with a large the fate of the Rollise of Mont Repub, house year to a rahim forthy mardered. He fives and you shall see him."

He rose and left the rossa, and, shortly after, the thunsper a staff was heard, the door opened and the Rechment of the fore them! Ceralic started up with a glad cry, and sprung to me thim, when the white beard and cloak fell off, and they saw—Aubrey De Lambert!

"You the Relac," cried Condie. "Is it possible!"

"I and no other. In this disguise my plans have been perfected and have succeeded at length. You saw the weapon of that deal villain shiver on my breast. That was because it streek a vest of Milan steel of the finest temper, which no sword could pierce. The same turned aside the bullet which Size ant Darmay aimed at it, and it enabled me to dure many darg is which looked wonderful in the eyes of men. But, my days of suffering are over, my dear daughter. Oh, that your matter could have lived to this hour!"

"But, I saw Neville hurl the stone upon your head, and you fell into the chasm," gasp d Coralie.

"Another delusion. The figure was not mine, but a stuffed figure, we tring my clothing, and purposely placed there to tapt Neville. He fell into the trap as you saw, and thinks to this day that I have been slain by his hand."

Walter Neville hanged himself in prison, and Le Sabreur was indived of his commission and returned to France, where happined a shortly after, in a duel which he had provoked. And in all to the English colonies, not during to meet the indirect in of Mantealm. Aubrey De Lambert, gladly gave his design r in marriage to the brave young soldier, Chastellar, and they be I happy and blameless lives. Both the men was had regained their ancient honors fought by Montealm's side that is, all his wars, and were both with him when he did by a the like I stained battle field on the Plains of Abraham

The stay of Alch was a sel one. Years before, when I. If I was a selected in Algers, he had surprised a camp of Mars of which Alch was chief. The women and children were present to the sword, and Abah fell under a terrible selected in the last of the folding of the lay in a pool of this can be a sure of the lifeties bodies of those he had been the last of the lay in a pool of the last of take service with De Lambert need not be told, but it was for the love of his servant that Lefebre had been suffered to live so long. When the time came, the deal Moors in that bloody camp were amply avenged

THE END.

DIME SCHOOL SERIES.

BUILDIN TAD COMBYAL mes Beach of the last to the wink of a structive and destrable Erlander, Example Sabens, reserved to record to the seasons of the the course of the contract of the contract of the contract and conts each.

DIME DIALOGUES, No. 1.

A THE RESERVE OF THE PERSON NAMED IN PARTY OF MA CALTER O A Prince Development

The state of the state of the state of

Ex Piggs by Charles THE PROPERTY OF

Fred wire to an a series bers the second of the property of the party of

1 . 1 ch . s. '2: 1 1 ' . ' 1 1 mm

Person Scotto la the Wedded Life of Mr. Bradley,

Mrs an was a stress at Firm count fertale.

Mor me with the Ware of the way of the I seller it to Manyout Fire Eve young ladice Ho . . . Fried . Acora Teretal Second to three male speakers. Y L K lier a Frittres dans nuttiwe! TA so The Pest my fithe Express Jesephine. For fear John & we ble ! her freiter.

1 of the liver. Frithree male speakers.

It great stat for 1 or 1 des time e sin allers. Ine lear's low a mag. For tweeve furnaise and one male, The V. Laga with One Gout. eman. For a ght for transcent and I note that o.

DIME DIALOGUES, No. 2.

The forming of Liberty, Frime manes and one the Higgs has y. For several 'animals.' 10 . 5 4.

The Rainbow. For several characters. Course to a tradition to see the per-

Tue country for a mag transfer to Saying But, For the New and the tool, a or two manual, as veral characters.

The transfer for I are a first two makes and two for I of the first two makes TO A POS.

The writer the Farry Queen. For several for Truck to land a live for the sea Bi Biob.

Takes in and Done For. For two characters. The Country Aust a Vant to the City. For say The Vitters, here a young lades, esal characters.

The Two Romans, For two males,

Trying the Cuaracters. For turns weles,

In with the trice 'I'm ar' burges. For two males,

A Semation at Last. For two maios.

The Three Men of Science, For tour males,

The I to I was not the girls.

How to Flud an Heir. For five males.

The Public Meeting. For Eve males and one to ma'e.

The Parah Traveler. For two makes,

DIME DIALOGUES, No. 3.

pe. ' - at at the Convent of he tre Dame, Cin- two makes. titter. Fr BE entre al.

The Dress Returns Convention. For ten females, makes and two females. Konning Bad Company. A Farce. For five malos. The Iwo Remans. A Company on costume. For Convey Street Printed. A Constitution ber two maios.

two have said one branch o.

Keet to the A Comedictia. For numer- The Buttle tall. A Recitative. For one male.

0 4 33 0 characters.

The May Queen, Mastel and Flora, Ivania, as Tre Gentral Cork. A Humirous Colloquy. For

Masters .. A Drau stic Charade. For twe

To Same, Sec ni scene. For two males.

hat an Representatives. A Burlesque. From wag the Wt to Feather. A Farce. For four tones and the leaders.

The total and the A Part of Drama. For three trales

Hee, Chan t and Breeze. A Rhymed Fancy. For

The last May. A Colloquy. For two buys.

DIME DIALOGUES, No. 4.

The Frest E. g. A Scenic Drama. For ten or The State on wn Volunteer. A Farce. For two I'm es at lette ferrate.

Starting in L. o. A Pet to Farce. For three A Stone from "Paul Pry." For four males. . A see and the fact a res.

Fa. .. El pe and the ay. A County y in verse. and the lemant. 2 of other little gard to

In your Jes A Mar Prants. For two three little gribs.

To War. At wa Famy. Forex lot egirls. What the Ladger Says. A "Negre" Bur coun-

The table . The American Liverties For two forms. - Private and series formation

Der co. 10,000 to 1 0 .000 0.0.

Thetruesullines. A Collegey. Priwy bors.

Here we will be a land, AC. way. For The Renard of tenevolence, A Man h Livat a. For fur ander. Parent CY. Almana. For twenty make. The letter, For two makes

DIME DIALOGUES, No. 5.

Three Grosses. A Fairy Extravagance. For juntersuin, Fir several male and fenale shar-· THE PLANE Seas manie & " Jures Surame " Fame

Behit I the Curture. A Domesti: Comedicta. FIRST STATE OF THE RESERVE THE PARTY NAMED IN

Transg A er . . . c i assaur Water Wer, An A. . g Clarade. A Partier

H w tel to tret an Answer. A Collogay. Por two has en. passing at A as a Cart my Perture mates.

The East war, Averaging, Francisco, 100

Ere to the ten of the law of the Armedian Armedian Armedian and the Armedi Fatra t at har to Fa era.

The ham -Boys' Tribunal. A "wanatic Epi-The Siz I ries. Franciscial. a. Pastion . . ie. rate. Pritters girls. What trains of a sense being us. A Demonto A Desvol Landyca). For sughe or I so of the girls was day they Repels Secret. For seven females buy mg. For three females and one male. m . f filled treating.

Dit b.

DIME DIALOGUES, No. 6.

Tre Past or or It hoursten, Fr the mais.

Wil warm I was I for a with man and I. Worsen's Rights. For seven females and tw-IL 1 THERE

An a good to die at fall more to the to the transfer of the ta. Acres to finance

T. o Generous Jew. For our males,

The lwis was to berthree man es. The between tre y. Prana. merel ferales. And hit y's beaux. For four leasers and two

I will all Sit Frime females and one male Contract to the traction of the state of the

The Three Rings. For two males.

DIME DIALOGUES, No. 7.

Tre Earth-Child in Fairy-Land. A Fairy-Land else. For two temales. Court Section. Est train to the print.

Trends Learn Honer, A Serv Contail Passage. I T two fe care at I the fines.

The Way to William. A College y. For two 4 2 4

A Postic Passage at Woods. For two We emperated. 10 4 4.

The 'Cligan. A Collegent. Frtse receive.

For several buys. Boarding School Accomplishments, A School males.

A Pos for the Pledge. A Colleguy, For two

The the of Dram-Drinking. A Collegey. For For two females. I'm men to war.

Tr offense, A Colompto, Fritzen ferrales. The Two Locturers, I'm not in names.

T . Two Beggara, A.M. norswania. First esteet. Two V. wast I. c. C. Hopev Frtwo fermies. The Rights of Music. A Colloquy and something

A Hope con Cases A Query in Verse, Friwo

Tie War't bo S 'all Teacher, A Selas I Day amerera Expension for two races.

Committee Later Date St. A Discourse Passing to I'm there are on

E. alt O' . K. A Little Girls' Col. quy. For fwoli - Editen

How to Get It I at a Bree A School Drait a Tree legt '. A C linguy For two better

Grief too Expensive, A Cotloguy. For two

Ha. 's t and the februar. A Burlesque. For two

I stie Red Edding Hood. A Nursery Lesson.

A New Appoint not an O't Rule, A College al Pass get h r two b to an integer, .Convert Contract A Contequy. For two males.

DIME DIALOGUES, No. 8.

The Pairs School, For a number of gris. My Getting a Philippe Fritwo males and two Mrs. Mara Pestody.

The Property Character at the Person of the ters, make at 1 terraie. By Clara Auristia

The three in a historiant, but three toris, By the series by O J Victor Lor & Lagrant

I will By Araz Alies

A tray to of from the party. makes Br C. A. A.

to not. Alternative The Granula former, 185 Aug Artell.

l same. b. A. P.

for a man Ala, led from "Amer an Macullan .

The best of the eral lear wenter For a

A N ... an it I ay not but a name of char-The terrisof the Perford, Forterse girls By assure a territor and femile, Py Clara Augusta. Tre b w? Rebellon, b riwon mes and one tectorial by e tail on bor two bys. Alepted freely set for the set at for that here for several makes and two for I at the terms and four makes Table's Very terie. For one made and one for C. they both the fratten. Frome made and one

The Fatter. For several suital Citation. By A Hard Case. For several it a e charactera, By

The Trial of Peter Chier Fr several mair is are. For ton fernance and one mair. By K.

DIME DIALOGUES, No. 9.

As jestiers and to a delice was a tage, Second. Special dress. Fire a to god School.

A torr a to Fire and, torret, g. Fr two boys, hereton a I tome on

The translation News. For tour federace and one The New Servicer For a number of girls.

40 1 4 4 Charles Fartwe' allobys. The I are from him two terms, ? . . . Friur for ead one male.

Tor two boys, The True Philosophy, For several females and three girls, two males.

A Count Laurente to. Por two females.

About any for Holy. Per a number of femores, The Law of Human Kondress. For two females.

the bed a nio bitu. For the total etc.

Lun Mar Quanti Chan, Jos. For a selection. A former dress and there may been write about he will be J Feet 10

Mrs. Lackland's Economy. For four boys and Should Women be Given the Ballot ! A Debate. Per severa, beye.

DIME DEBATER AND CHAIRMAN'S GUIDE, No. 11.

I. THE INPAT CONTROL OF SET SET SET SEE START ASSESS OF THE PROPERTY OF THE CO. II. How to It have from a set that . IV . In area. - I water it fact, Decates in I'll THE " STATE WANT OF SULLES. THE MERT T. Q STATISTICS AND I MARRES .-- LA D.

former, a restrict, and the second to the second to the second seconds.

$ 4" | to be a case will how a contract or the ent of the sent I'm you to be recipe 20 Are, Inu cues made. Lattie AND Colle'AND, Pu cas ris, 27 W. .. with 2 L. N. Y.

DIME AMERICAN SPEAKER, No. 1.

Young America. Plea for the Maine law, A. Ward's oration, Not on the battlefield, The Italian struggle, Independence, Our country, The equality of maa, Character of the Revo'n The fruits of the war, The sowing-machine, True manhood, The mystery of life, The ups and downs,

The truly great, Birthday of Washington Early retiring and ris'g, Irue nationality, Our natal day, The war, Charge of light brigade, After the battle, The glass railroad, Case of Mr. Marbeth, Prof. on phrenology, Washington's name, The sailor boy's syren,

J. Jeboom's oration, A Dutch cure, 1 The weather, The heated term, Philosophy applied, Intelligence the basis of Penny wise, pound fool- A vision in the forum. [liberty, True cleanliness, [ish, The press, Sat'd'y night's sujoy'ts, Woman's rights, " In a just cause," No peace with oppres- My ladder, BROTE A thankagiving sermon, Alone, The cost of riches, G est lives imperishable Disunion,

The prophecy for the y Unfinished problems, Honor to the dead, limmortality of patriots Webst's polit'l system, Right of the governed. Woman. The rebellion of 1861,

SPEAKER, No. 2. DIME NATIONAL Union and its results, Our country's fature, The statesman's labors, Let the childless weep, Our country's glory, Union a household, Independence bell, The scholar's dignity, A Christmas chant, The true higher law, The one great need, The ship and the bird, Tecumseb's speech,

Territorial expansion, Martha Hopkins, The bashful man's story Our domain, The matter-of fact man, Systems of belief, Rich and poor, Seeing the eclipse, Beauties of the law, Go-lang! git up, The rate of life, Three fools, Washington, Our great inheritance, Eulogium on H'y Clay,

Obio, Oliver Hazard Peryr The Indian chief, The independent farmer, The bugle, Mrs. Grammar's ball, How the money comes, Future of the fashions, Stability of Christianity Crauwning glory of U.S. Our country first, last, and always, British influence, Defense of Jefferson, National batreda, Murder will out, Strive for the best, Early rising, Deeds of kindness, Gates of sleep, The Hoodish gem, Purity of the struggle, Old age, Beautiful and true, The worm of the still, Man and the Infinite, Language of the Eagle. Washington.

PATRIOTIC SPEAKER, No. 3.

America to the world, Love of country, dight of self-preserva- Christy's speech, Jur canse, A Kentuckian's appeal, Brigand-ier-Gener Centucky stead ast, Fimidity is treason, For alarum, April 15th, 1981, The apirit of '81, The precious heritage,

The Irish element, Train's speech, tion, Let me alone, The draft, Union Square spaeches, Great Bell Roland. The Union, Our country's call, The story of an oak tree, King Cotton, Larg on my leg,

History of our flag, T. F. Musgher's address, We owe to the Union, Last speech of Stephen Duty of Christian pat A. Douglass, Lincoln's message, The New Year and the The onus of slavery, Union, Battle anthems,

The ends of peace, Freedom the watchwork Crisis of our nation, riota, Turkey Dan's oration, A fearless plea, A foreigner's tribute, Catholic cathedral, The "Speculators."

DIME COMIC SPEAKER, No. 4.

Misbey ergoss on the war Pop. Age bluntly considered, A Texan Eulogium, Early rising. The wasp and the bee, Comic Grammar No. 1, I'm not a single man, A. Ward's savies. Burfus on Fickwick, Romeo and Juliet, Happinson, . Dogs,

How to be a freman, The United States, Puff's sec't of himself, Practical phremology, Beautiful, Cabbage, Disagreeable people, Punny folks,

A song of woe, Parody, The mountebank, Compound interest, A sermon on the feet, Old dog Jock, The Sahes' toilet, Brian O'Linn, What is a bachelor like ! Crockett to office-seekers Lecture on locomotion. Who is my opponer 11 Mrs. Caudle on umbr'lla Political stump speech, Ward's trip to Rickm'd, Comic Grammar No. 1 Farewell to the bottle. The cork leg, The smack in school, Slick's depolition of wife Tale of a hat, The debating club, A Dutch sermon, DIME ELOCUTIONIST, No. 5.

BEC 1. PRINCIPLES OF TRUE ENUNCIATION .- | ORATION .- Rules of Composition as applied to Faults in councisties; how to avoid them, etc. Words, Phrases, Sentences, etc., etc., etc. SEC. II. THE ANY OF ORATORY .- Sheridan's SEC. IV. REPRESENTATIVE EXERCISES IN PROSE List of the Passions, etc., etc., etc.

AND VERSE.-Falstaff; Byron; Hamlet, etc. SEC. III. THE COMPONENT ELEMENTS OF AN SEC. V. OBSERVATIONS OF GOLD AUTHORITIES.

DIME HUMOROUS SPEAKER, No. 6.

and story A string of onlone, A tragic story, CEER. Courtship, Dobt Devile. Dow, jr.'s lactures, Ego and scho, Pashionable women, Fern thistles, Good-nature, Sottlieb Klebeyergran, House Elglow's opinions Dunghter,"

How the money goes, Han-kl-do-ri's Fourth of Right names, July oration, If you mean no, say no, The ager, Jo Bows on leap year, Lay of the henpecked, Lot Skinger's elegy, Mairimony, Nothing to do, Old Grimes's son, 2000, 10

Poetry run mad, Scientific lectures, The cockney, The codfish, The fate of Sergeant The waterfall, Thin, The entner's quarrel, Old Candle's umbrella, The Hamerican wood- Vagaries of popping the chuck, " Paddle your own ca- The harp of a thousand Woat I wouldn't be, strings, Schlacksolichter's smake Parody on "Araby's The last of the sarpints. Ze Monkesterr, The march to Moscow, 11938.

The my sterious guest, The bump, The sea-serpent, The secret, The shoomaker, The useful doctor, To the bachelors' unless lengue, question, Yankee doodle Aladdha the world we live in, Woman's claims, Authors of our liberty, The real conqueror, The citizen's heritage Italy, The mechanic, The modern good, [sun, The neck, Ossian's address to the Foggy thoughts, Independence bell, 1777, The ladies' man, John Barns, Gettysburg, Life, No sect in heaven, The idler. Miss Prude's tea-party, The unbeliever,

DIME STANDARD SPEAKER, No. 7.

The power of an idea, The two lives, The beneficence of the The true scholar, Suffrage, [sea, Judges not infallible; HowCyrus laid the cabi' Instability of successful What is war, The pretijest hand, Paradoxical, Nature & Nature's God, Little Jerry, the miller. The people always con- The race, Dream of the revelers, Fanaticism, [crime, True moral courage, Agriculture, Ireland, [quer, My Deborah Lee, Music of labor, Prossia and Austria, Wishing, The Blarney stone, The student of Bonn, The broken household, A shot at the decanter.

The Bible, The purse at d the sweet My country, Butter, The pin and needle, The modern Poriton Immortality of the soul. Occupation, Heroism and daring, DIME STUMP SPEAKER, No. 8.

on the situation,

Hon. J.M. Stubbe' views Good-nature a blessing, America, [fallacy, Temptations of cities, Sermon from hard; shell " Right of secession " a Broken resolutions, Hans Schwackheimer on Tail-enders, [Baptist, Life's sunset, woman's suffrage, The value of money, Human nature, All for a nomination, Meteoric disquisition, Lawyers, Old ocean, [sea, Be sure you are right, Wrongs of the Indians, A Frenchman's dinner, Appeal in behalf of Am. Unjust national acquires Theatar bangled spanner Cranbed folks, [shrew, Miseries of war, [liberty The amateur cachman, Stay where you belong, Taming a macculine Lay Sermon, Life is what you make it, Farmers, [country, A dream, Where's my money, The true greatness of our Astronomical, Speach from conscience, N. England & the Union, The moon, [sens, Jno. Thompson's danger, Man's relation to society The unseen battle-field, Duties of American citi- House-cleaning. The limits to happiness, Plea for the Republic, The man, | It is not your business

There is no death, Races. The cold-water man, Permanency of States, Liberty of speech, DIME JUVENILE SPEAKER, No. 9.

A boy's philosophy, Hoe out your row, Six-year-old's protest, The suicidal cat, A valediction, Popping corn, The editor, The same, in rhyme, The fairy shoemaker, What was learned, Press on, The horse, The make in the grass, Tale of the tropics, Bromley's speech, The same, second extract Repentance, The father's child, Shaksperlan scholar, Malden's pasim of life, A mixture, Plea for skates,

Playing ball, Ah, why, Live for something, Lay of the henparked, The outside dog, Wolf and lamb, Lion in love, Frogs asking for a king, Stck Hon, Country and town mice, Man and woman, Honor, Lotux-planter, Little things, Baby's solfloquy, Plea for Eggs, Humbug pairiotism, Night after Christman, Short legs,

How the raven became Nothing to do, black, A mother's work, The asme, Who rules, A sheep story, Little correspondent, One good turn deserves My dream, [another, Homosopathic soup, Rain, I'll never use tobacco, A mosale, The old barhelor, Prayer to light, Little Jim, Angelina's lament, John'y Shrlmps on boats The ocean storm, Mercy, Choice of hours, Poor Richard's savings, Shrimps on amusements, Who killed Tom Roper, Prescription for apring

Honesty heat policy, Heaven. Ho for the fields, Frabion on the brain. On Shanghala, A smile, Casabianca, Nose and eyes, COULS, Malt. A hundred years to The madman and his Little sermons, [rance, Snuffles on electricity, The two cradles, Do thy little, do it well, Little pusa, Base-hall, lever.

DIME SPREAD-EAGLE SPEAKER, No. 10.

Ben Buster's oration, Hans Von Spiegel's 4th, Josh Billings' advice, A hard-shell sermon, The boots, The squeeser, Nosh and the devil, A lover's luck, Hijalutin Adolphus, Digestion and Paradise, Original Maud Muller, Distinction's disadvant-Smith, Quahalina Bendibus, A stock of notions, Speaking for the sheriff, Daking a shwest, Then and now, Josh Billings' lecturing, Doctor DaBlister's ann's Consignments, Hard lives, Dan Bryant's speech, A colored view. Nobody, ages. Train of circumstances, Good advice, The itching paim, Drum-bend sermons, Schnitzeri's philosopede Kissing in the street, "Woman's rights," Luke Lather, The hog. Jack Spratt, New England tragedy, The ancient bachelor, Jacob Whittle's speech, Jerks prognosticates, A word with Snooks, Sul Lovengued, A mule ride, [burners, Music of labor, Josh Billings on the The American ensign.

Il trovatore, Scandalous, Slightly Mired, The office-seeker, Old bachelors, WORD, The Niam Niama, People will talk, Swackhamer's ball, Who wouldn't be fire's, tion't depend on daddy

The above books are sold by Newsdealers everywhere, or will be sent, Post-paid, on receipt of perios, Ton cents each

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers, 92 William Street, New York,

(Dime Speaker Series No. 13, Just Published.)

Fanny Butterfly's Ball. Tropies Uncongenial to Greatness.

Live for Something. Civil and Religious Lib'ty Second Review of the Grand Army.

The Dishonesty of Politics.

The Great Commoner. Character and Achievement.

"I Can't."

" It Might Have Been." Don't strike a Man when down.

On Keening at It.

The Treasures of Deep.

Keep Cool.

The Precious Freight.

A Sketch. The Sword the True Arbiter.

Aristocracy. Baron Grimalkin's Death. Obed Snipkins.

A Catastrophe. Cheerininess. Mountains.

Last Lay of the Minstrel. The Unlucky Lovers.

The Dread Secret. Civil Service Reform. The True Gentleman.

The Tragic Pa. A Cry for Life. The Sabbath. Gnarled Lives.

A Good Life. To Whom Shall We Give Resolution. Never Mind. The Bible.

Christianity Our Bulwark The Want of the Hour. The Midnight Train.

The Better View. Do Thy Little- do it Well.

Jesus Forever. The Heart.

The World. Beautiful Thoughts. A Picture of Life. Be True to Yourself.

Time is Passing. The Gospel of Autumn. Speak not Harshly.

Courage. The Eternal Hymn.

Live for Good. The Silent City.

Thank-BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers, 98 William Street, N. Y.

Beadle's Standard Dime Publications.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK.

Bach volume 100 12mo, pages. Sent postage-paid, on receipt of price, ten cents each,

Dime Novels I. Maineaka. The Privateer's Cruise. 3. Myra. 4. Affice Wildle. 5. The Golden Belt. 6. Chip, the Cave Child. 7. The Reefer of '76. H. Seth Jones. 9. The Slave Sculptor. 10. The Backwoods Bride. 11. Prisoner La Vintresse. 12. Bill Bidden, Trapper. 13. Cedar Swamp. 14. Emerald Neckince. 15. The Frontier Augal. 16. Unale Ezekiel. 17. Madge Wylde. 18. Nat Todd. 19. Massasolt's Daughter. 20. Florida. 21. Sybil Chase. 29. The Mald of Esopus. 2% Winifred Winthrop. 24. The Trail Hunters. 25. The Peon Prince. 26. Brethren of the Count. 27. Daughter of Liberty. 28. King Barnaby. 20. The Forest Spy. 50. Put. Poinfret's Ward. tl. The Double Hero. J2. Irons. 43. Mnom Guinas, " 31. Ruth Margeria. 35. East and West. 36. Ritlemon of the Miami. 47. Godbold, the Spy. 45. The Wrong Man. 49. The Land Claim. 10, Unionist's Daughter." 41. The Hunter's Cabin. 42, The King's Man. 43. The Allens, 14. Agues Falkland. 45. Eveluer. 46, Wreek of the Albion. 47. Tim Bumble's Charge. 18, Osmomeo, the Havon. 19. The Gold Hunters, 50. The Black Ship. 11. The Two Guards. 52. Single Eye. El. Hates and Loves. 54. Myrtis. 55. Off and On. 56. Ahmo's Plot Mr. The Scout. as. The Mad Hunter. Mr. Kent, the Ramer. 60. do Daviesa' Client. 61. Laughing Eyes. 67. The Unknown 63, The Indian Princess. 64. Rangors of Mohawk. 45. The Wrecker's Prize. 66. The Hunter's Yow. 67. Indian Jim. 65. The Brigantine. 69. Black Hollow, 70. The Indian Queca-The Lost Trail-72. The Moose Hunter.

73. The Silver Bugle,

74. Croiser of Chesapeake 148. Ontward Bound, 75. The Hunter's Escape. 76, The Scout's Prize. 77, Quindaro, 78. The Rival Scouts. 79. Schuylkill Rangers. 80, Eagle Eye. 81. The Two Hunters. $2. The Mystic Canoe: 83. The Golden Flurpoon. 84. The Seminole Chief. 85. The Fugitives 86. Red Plume. 87. On the Deep. 88. Captain Molly. 89. Star Eyea. 50, Cast Away. 91. The Lost Cacho. 99. The Twin Scouts. 23. The Creek Sisters. 94. The Mad Skipper. 95. Eph Peters. 96, Little Morcasin. 97. The Damped Hunter. 98. Ruth Harland. 89. Overboard. 100. Karalboy 101. Maid of Wyoming. 102. Hearts Forever. 105. Big Foot, the Guide. 104. Guilty or Not Guilty. 105, Tue Man in Green. 105. Simple Phil. 107. The Peddler Spy. 108. The Lost Ship. 109. Kidnopped. 110. The Hidden Home. III. The Shawnest Foe, Hy. The Falcon Rover. 113. Rattiepute. 114. Ned Spirling. 115. The Some of Liberty, 116. Port at Last. 1117. The Mohegan Maiden. 118. The Water Walt. 119. The Five Champions. 120. The Hunchback. 121. Vailed Benefactress. 127, Burden, the Ranger. 125. The Missing Bride, 124. Sumter's Scouts. 125. The Hunted Life. 146. Old Jupe. 197 Bahl Eagle. 193 The Gulch Minera. 199, Blackever 130. Brave Heart, 131. Wrecker's Daughter. 132. Old Honorty. IEL Vankes Eph. 134. Foul-weather Jack. 135. The Cherokee Chief. 136. The Indian-Hunters. 187. The Trailor Spy. 138, Tim, the Scout. 139. The Border Food 140. Sheet-Anchor Tom. 141. The Helplem Hand, 142, The Sagamore of Suco. 216, Red Bell. 143. The Swainp Scout, 44. The Prairie Trappers. 145. The Mountaineer. 146. Border Bessig. 147. Maid of the Mountain, 221. The Blue Clipper.

145. The Hunter's Pledge. 150. The Scalp-Hunters. 151. The Two Tealls. 152. The Planter Pirate. 153. Mohawk Nat. 154. Rob Ruskin. 136. The White Squaw. 156. The Quakeress Spy. 157. The Indian Avenger. 155. The Blue Anchor. 159. Snowblrd. 160. The Swamp Rifles. 161. The Lake Rangers. 162. The Border Rivals. 163. Job Dean, Trapper. 164. The Giant Chief. 165. The Unseen Hand. 166. Red-Skin's Pleague 167. Shadow Juck. 168. The Silent Hunter." 169. The White Carrow. 170. The Border Avengers. 171. The Silant Staver. 172. Despured, the Spy-173. The Red Covote 174. Queen of the Woods. 175. The Prairie Rifles. 176. The Trader Spy. 177, The Pale-face Squaw. 178. The Prairie Bride. 179. The White Vulture 189, Giant Pete, Patriot. 15). Old Kyle, the Trailer. 152. Jaber Hawk. 18%. The Phantom Ship. 184. The Red Rider. 185. The Dacotah Sconrge. 186. The Red Scalper. 181. The Outlaws' Plot. 188. The Black Rover. 189. The Yellow Chief. 190. Phantom Horseman, 191. Red Shayer, 192. The Specter Skipper. 193. The Swamp Ridera. 191. Graylock, the Guide. 195. The First Trail. 196. Eagle Plume. 197. Shawner Scout-198. Hort Bunker. 199. Red Ontlaw. 200. Prairie Pathfinder. 201. White Serpent. 202. Phantom Foe. 2007 Masked Gulde. 204. Metamors. 205. The Gray Scalp. 206, Burkskin Bill. 100. The Buthlo-Trapper. 208, The Ocean Outlaw, 209. Scarred Engle: 210, Redlaw, Half-Brend. 511. The Quadroon Spy. 212. Silverspur. 913, Summer Dick. 214. The Forest Menster-215. The White Hermit, 929. The Mad Ranger. the King of the Riverte. 1912. The Blohave Captive. 205. Black Arcone. 226. Most mg-Hunters. 297, The Forest Princeps. The Mute Chief. ven. The Wille Grady. 150, The Parkson Spr. thi. The Terms Trainer. The Prairie Queen, 233. The Privateer's Bride. 9 4. The Forest Specier. 2.5. The Black Wigard. 236. The leafiend. 237. The Plymouth Scout 228. Night-Hawk Kit. Dime School Series, I. Am r.can Sprant. 2. Nalivual Spenker. 3, Patriotic Speciant, 4. Comic Specher. 5. Elecutionists 6. Humorous Speaker. 7. Standard Spenier. 8. Stump Specker. 9. Juvenile Symber. 10. Sprind-Engle Speaker. L. Dime Debuter. 2. Exhibition Speaker. DIALOGUES, Nov. 1 to 10. ALPICATION. School Melodist, Dime Hand-Books, 1. Letter-Writer. 2. Benk of Etiquette. S. Book of Verses. 4. Book of Dresma, 5. Fortune-Teller. 6. Ladies' Letter Writer. 7. Lovers' Casket. S. Robinson Crusoe. 9. Ball-room Componion. BOOKS OF PUN, NOW 1 to 3. Hlme Game-Books, Buse-Ball Player for 1871. Book of Croquet. Chose Instructor. Dime Family Series. 1. Cook Book: 2. Recipe Book. S. Housewife's Manual. . Eandly Physician. 5. Dressmaking, Millinery. Dime Song Books. Song Books, Non. 1 to 28. Dime Biographics. 1 Americanistic 2. Daniel Borne, IL Kit Curaru. 4. Authory Wayne, " 5. David Crockett. 6. Winfield Snoth 7. Pontlac. S. John C. Fremont 9. John Paul Jones. 10. Murquis de Lafayette. 11. Tecunwels. 12. George B. McClellan. Id. Parson Brownion. 14. Abraham Lincoln. 15. Ulymon S. Grant-

Novels marked with a star are double numbers, 200 pages. Price 20 cents-For sale by all Newsdeelers . or sent, rost-past, to may address, on receipt of price, was cause water.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers, 98 William St., N. Y.

217. Mountain Gid,

219. The Scioto Scouts;

218, Indian Spy,

990. Nick Dayle.